In due time the contestee filed an answer to the notice of contest, which contains a general denial of all the material facts and allegations set forth in the notice of contest and several charges of bribery and corruption on the part of the contestant and his friends, and other explanations and allegations on which it is claimed the contestee was elected. And it may be stated at the outset that none of the charges of bribery and corruption alleged in contestee's answer are sustained by the evidence. None were claimed to have been established on the argument before this committee, and no claim to that effect is made in the views of the minority. It appears that early in the hearings this part of the contestee's case was abandoned.

On this notice of contest and answer, which are the pleadings in this case, the parties proceeded to take the evidence. About 6,500 witnesses were sworn on the part of the contestant, and about 300 witnesses on the part of the contestee. Their evidence, with the exhibits, is contained in these nine books of fair dimensions, and also in these four volumes of fine printed matter, consisting of 3,824 pages. In due time the contestant filed and served a brief consisting of 456 pages, setting forth definitely the names of the men who it is claimed were illegal voters and who cast their votes for the contestee, with the evidence in each case relied on to sustain that contention. It also contains extracts of evidence of quite a large amount which it is claimed is particularly pertinent to the questions involved.

The contestee filed a brief of 101 pages, setting forth his views of the law and the facts and the reasons why, in his judgment, he should retain his seat. Thereafter the contestant filed and served a brief in reply, consisting of 84 pages. The counsel on both sides were given all the time they desired in the argument before the committee, which lasted for a whole week, the time being about equally divided. Additional typewritten briefs were served on the committee. The examination of this evidence and these exhibits and the consideration of these briefs and the authorities therein cited was the task submitted to this committee. We have given them much time and study and careful deliberation, considering the amount of evidence and number of questions involved.

We felt that it would be impossible for the Members of this House to examine the record and the briefs in this case, and we have therefore honestly striven to divest ourselves of all partisan spirit and party consideration, to the end that we may present a fair and just report and conclusion, based only on the merits of this case and on the evidence as contained in the record. A seat in this House is a distinguished honor and of much concern to the individual, but of more importance is it to the several districts in this country that they be represented only by men who are fairly and honestly elected.

BOROUGH OF DUNMORE.

Contestant vigorously attacked the returns from the first and second districts of the First Ward, the second district of the Second Ward, the third district of the Third Ward, and the first district of the Sixth Ward, all of the borough of Dunmore, for fraud, and for the reason that after the contest was commenced and when contestant was endeavoring to impound the ballots, that they might be preserved for inspection, the ballots from those districts were so mutilated by being water-soaked as to be undecipherable. It was claimed that this was done in the interest of the contestee, for the purpose of covering and concealing fraud perpetrated by the election officers.

Your committee finds that the destruction of those ballots, under the circumstances revealed by the evidence, is not free from suspicion, but it does not find sufficient evidence to establish fraud on the part of the election officers or to charge the contestee with personal responsibility for the destruction of the ballots. It therefore declined to interfere with the returns from those several districts.

Contestant also attacked the returns from the Second and Third wards of Winton and the first district of the borough of Old Forge on the ground that because of gross and palpable fraud the truth could not be obtained from the returns, and that no reliance should be placed upon them. Much evidence is contained in the record pertinent to these questions, and a large part of the time of the respective counsel in their argument was devoted to the consideration of these election districts. And your committee has taken them up and reported its conclusions with reference to them in the order in which they were considered by the respective counsel.

In its report your committee quoted several sections of the statutes of Pennsylvania composing the election law, and cites several cases from the supreme court of that State construing those statutes. Counsel for the contestee on the argument did not seriously question the law or the construction of it by the courts of Pennsylvania, as claimed by contestant's counsel. I take the liberty of quoting a few of these sections for the purpose of showing distinctly wherein they were grossly violated by the election officers and others with their consent:

CONSTITUTIONAL QUALIFICATIONS.

Every male citizen 21 years of age, possessing the following qualifications, shall be entitled to vote at all elections:

I. He shall have been a citizen of the United States at least one month.

II. He shall have resided in the State one year (or if, having previously been a qualified elector or native-born citizen of the State, he shall have removed therefrom and returned, then six months) immediately preceding the election.

III. He shall have resided in the election district where he shall offer to vote at least two months immediately preceding the election.

IV. If 22 years of age or upward he shall have paid, within two years, a State or county tax, which shall have been assessed at least two months, and paid at least one month before the election. (Art. VIII, sec. 1, Constitution. January 1, 1874.)

All laws regulating the holding of elections by the citizens or for the registration of electors shall be uniform throughout the State. (Art. VIII, sec. 7, Constitution. January 1, 1874.)

ELECTION LAWS OF THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

For the purpose of making the original annual assessment and registration of voters in each of the election districts of this Commonwealth, it shall be the duty of each of the assessors who are required to perform any of the duties incident to the holding of elections and the registration of voters in the different election districts of this Commonwealth to visit in person each and every dwelling house in his district on the first Monday in May and the first Monday of December of each year, or as soon thereafter as may be possible and practicable, where all of said dwelling houses can not be personally visited by him on the said first Monday of May and on the first Monday of December, and to make a list, in a book prepared for that purpose by the county commissioners, of all qualified electors that he shall find, upon careful and diligent inquiry, to be bona fide residents of his district, together with the date when such dwelling house was visited by the assessor, entering them in such book in the order of which such dwelling houses are visited; and the qualified electors in each dwelling house being grouped together, and if in a city or town the names of the qualified electors shall be grouped together by streets, alleys, or courts, and the persons so found to be qualified electors shall forthwith be assessed; the assessor shall, in all cases, personally ascertain by careful and diligent inquiry of the voter or some known resident of the election district in which the voter claims the right to vote, upon what grounds each person so assessed claims to be a legally qualified voter. (Act of May 29, 1891, sec. 1, P. L., 134.)

It shall be the duty of said assessor to make a copy of said original list, with the observations and explanations required to be noted as aforesaid, to be made out as soon as practicable. It shall be his duty on or prior to the fourth Monday of May and on or prior to the second Monday of December in each year to place a copy on the door of or on the house where the election of the respective district is required to be held, and retain the original list in his possession for the inspection, free of charge, of any person resident in the said election district who shall desire to see the same; and it shall be the duty of the said assessor to assess, from time to time, on the personal application of anyone claiming the right to vote, the name of such claimant, and mark opposite the name "C. V.," and immediately assess him, noting, as in all other cases, his occupation, residence, the date of his assessment, whether a boarder or housekeeper; if a boarder, with whom he boards, and whether naturalized or designing to be, marking in all cases opposite the name the letter "N." "D.," or "I. N.," as the case may be. If the person claiming to be assessed be naturalized, he shall exhibit to the assessor his certificate of naturalization; and if he claims that he designs to be naturalized before the next ensuing election, he shall exhibit the certificate of his declaration of intention, if such previous declaration is required by the laws of the United States. (Act of May 16, 1895, sec. 2, P. L., 77.)

After the assessments have been completed on the sixty-first day before the third Tuesday of February, and on the sixty-first day before the Tuesday next following the first Monday of November in each year, the assessor shall on the following day make a return to the county commissioners of the "original registry list" thus revised and completed, and two exact copies thereof, and the county commissioners shall thereupon proceed to make out a complete list, in alphabetical order, of all persons so returned as taxables in said election district, and furnish the same, together with the necessary election blanks, to the officers of the election district on or before 7 o'clock in the morning of election, and no man shall be permitted to vote at the election on that day whose name is not on said list unless he shall make proof of his right to vote as hereinbefore required. (Act of May 16, 1895, sec. 3, P. L., 75.)

On the day of election any person whose name shall not appear on the registry of voters, and who claims the right to vote at said election, shall produce at least one qualified voter of the district as a witness to the residence of the claimant in the district in which he claims to be a voter, for the period of at least two months immediately preceding said election, which witness shall be sworn or affirmed, and subscribe a written or partly written and partly printed affidavit to the facts stated by him, which affidavit shall define clearly where the residence is of the person so claiming to be a voter; and the person so claiming the right to vote shall also take and subscribe a written or partly written and partly printed affidavit, stating, to the best of his knowledge and belief, when and where he was born; that he has been a citizen of the United States one month, and of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; that he has resided in the Commonwealth one year, or if formerly a qualified elector or a native-born citizen thereof, and has removed therefrom and returned, that he has resided therein six months next preceding said election; that he has resided in the district in which he claims to be a voter for the period of at least two months immediately preceding said election; that he has not moved in the district for the purpose of voting therein; that he has, if 22 years of age, or upward, paid a State or county tax within two years, which was assessed at least two months, and paid at least one month before the election; the said affidavit shall also state when and where the tax claimed to be paid by the affiant was assessed, and when and where and to whom paid; and the tax receipt therefor shall be produced for examination, unless the affiant shall state in his affidavit that it has been lost or destroyed or that he never received any; and if a naturalized citizen, shall also state when, where, and by what court he was naturalized, and shall also produce his certificate of naturalization for examination.

But if the person so claiming the right to vote shall take and subscribe an affidavit that he is a native-born citizen of the United States, or, if born elsewhere, shall state the fact in the affidavit, and shall produce evidence that he has been naturalized, or that he is entitled to citizenship by reason of his father's naturalization, and shall further state in his affidavit that he is, at the time of making the affidavit, of the age of 21 and under 22 years; that he has been a citizen of the United States one month, and has resided in the State one year; or, if a native-born citizen of the State and removed therefrom and returned, that he has resided six months next preceding said election, and in the election district two months immediately preceding such election, he shall be entitled to vote, although he shall have not paid taxes.

The said affidavits of all persons making such claims and the affidavits of the witnesses to their residence shall be preserved by the election board, and at the close of the election they shall be inclosed with the list of voters, tally list, and other papers required by law to be filed by the return judge with the prothonotary, and shall remain on file therewith, in the prothonotary's office, subject to examination as other election papers are. * * * (Act of January 30, 1874, sec. 10, P. L. 35.)

A certificate of election is prima facie evidence of title to a seat. A contestant has the burden of proof. He must show by a fair preponderance of evidence that the certificate is not a correct expression of the legal voters of the district, and that he, and not the contestee, is, on the facts and the law, entitled to it.

In the proceedings, the taking of evidence and the presentation of this case to the committee, contestant assumed that burden. Several precincts or districts were attacked on the ground that the elections were conducted in such a reckless and lawless manner, that the whole proceedings were so permeated by fraud, as to render the returns from those districts null and void. Individual votes were attacked on the ground that the men who cast them were not legally qualified voters under the requirements of the law of the State of Pennsylvania.

I will say that in the view of the minority the legal propositions contained in the report of the committee are not questioned, and therefore it may be assumed that the minority concede the statement of law and construction of the law in the majority report to be correct.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I understood the gentleman to say that we of the minority conceded something. I could not understand just what he said and I will ask him please to state it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I simply said that in your report you raised no question as to the legal proposition contained in the report of the committee, and I therefore assumed that you believed that the law as stated in that report and the constructions of the law as stated in that report were correct. Am I right?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that the law as stated in the report is not correct, but, so far as I am concerned, it was not discovered to be incorrect until after the minority report was written. I supposed you had quoted the law correctly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Do you mean that the law is not correctly stated?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. It is not a correct statement of the law of Pennsylvania. That is what I mean.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Do you mean it is simply a typographical error? If so, I shall not raise any question as to a typographical error.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. No; I do not refer to a typographical error at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, the statute as set out by the majority of the committee was assumed to be correct, but since the filing of the majority report and the views of the minority we have found that one of the statutes set out in the report has been repealed or very materially amended, but I do not think that it makes much difference in the consideration of this case. That is all.

Mr. DRISCOLL. As to that I can only say that these statutes were read by counsel on both sides before the committee, back and forth, for a week, and nobody questioned but what the statutes set forth in this report are now the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and this is the first suggestion on the part of anybody against our contention, and the first claim by anyone that these are not the existing laws of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the gentleman will not misunderstand me. I do not think that any blame attaches to the majority of the committee. I do not think that the amendment I refer to is very material in the case.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I wish you would state it now if it is material.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is in your report, quoting from the laws of Pennsylvania, providing that the registry officers shall before the election make two alphabetical lists of the registered voters and furnish them to the managers of elections. In 1895, I think it is—I can have the statute here—the legislature of Pennsylvania amended that section by striking out all of it and substituting other language, and providing that one copy of the registry list should be furnished to the election officers.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Well, to my notion now, only one copy was supposed to be furnished by the county commissioners to the officers of election. I have treated the case on that theory.

Mr. JOHNSON. I stated that I did not think it was very material.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And I will refer briefly to those statutes so far as they are applicable to the facts in this case. There are in the county of Lackawanna a board of county commissioners. I understand that they are a bipartisan or a nonpartisan board. There is also in each election district an assessor, who is called an "election assessor." On the first Monday in May he visits every dwelling house in his election district. He takes down all the names of the male residents of legal age. He has a book something like this [exhibiting], in which he inserts the name of the person. If he is a qualified voter, he writes opposite his name "V.," that he is a voter. If he is a naturalized citizen, he writes "N." opposite his name. If of foreign birth and has taken out his first papers, he writes opposite his name "I. N.," meaning he has declared his intention.

Mr. JOHNSON. "D. I."

Mr. DRISCOLL. Not in here.

Mr. JOHNSON. The statute says declaration of intention.

Mr. DRISCOLL. "I. N.," as it is in this book.

Mr. PALMER. It is "I. N." in the statute.

Mr. McLAIN. That is, "I. N." where he intended to declare, and "D. I." when he had declared.

Mr. DRISCOLL. "I. N.," he intended to become naturalized.

Now, within sixty days before the election the election assessor returns this book to the county commissioners, and they take up this book and arrange the names in alphabetical order, and they retain the designations of "V." "D. I.," and "I. N.," indicating the legal status of the man opposite his name. On or before the day of election the county commissioners are required to deliver to the election officers of each election precinct a copy of this book where the names are alphabetically arranged, and that book is for the use of the election officers on the day of election.

Now, in addition to the statutes, I will read a section or a part of the oath of the election officers, because the election inspectors and the judges of election are required to take an oath before they commence their duties on the morning of the election, and the substance of the oath of the election inspector is as follows:

I will not receive any ticket or vote from any person other than such as I firmly believe to be, according to the provisions of the constitution and laws of this Commonwealth, entitled to vote at such election without requiring such evidence of the right to vote as is directed by law.

The oath taken by the judge of election contains this statement:

I will not give my consent that any vote or ticket shall be received from any person other than such as I firmly believe to be, according to the constitution and laws of this Commonwealth, entitled to vote at such election without requiring such evidence of the right to vote as is directed by law, etc.

This book, alphabetically arranged, is before the election officers. The law says that no man shall be permitted to vote at the election on that day whose name is not on said list unless he shall make proof of his right to vote, as required by law. In other words, these election officers shall not let any man vote, no matter who he is, high or low, unless his name appears on the list as a qualified voter.

Now, what do they do? When a man goes into the election booth there are inspectors, there are clerks, there is a judge in charge of the election. That man's name is called out aloud. The election clerks are supposed to look over their lists and see if that man's name appears on those lists as a qualified voter. If it does so appear, he is given a ticket—a ballot—can go into the booth and mark it and vote; and he may be challenged, and if challenged he is required to qualify himself by oath, but if he is not challenged and if his name appears on the book as a qualified voter he may vote. If his name does not appear on that list, he shall not be allowed to vote, unless what? Unless he swears in an affidavit stating all the facts necessary to show that he is a legal and qualified voter of the State and county and that particular district.

Now, in this district these election officers, with this book before them, allowed a large number of men to go in there and vote whose names were not on the list.

Contestee, in his brief and in the argument on the brief before our committee, claimed there were 83 such votes cast. Contestee's counsel, Mr. Ballantine, in the presence of contestee and in the presence of our committee, admitted that 50 such votes were cast and received without any affidavits.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Without being registered?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Without being registered and without any affidavits; and contestee's counsel, at page 18 of their brief, say that there were no affidavits taken in that district because there were no unregistered votes, although the record shows there were from 50 to 83 unregistered votes.

Mr. BENNY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Certainly.

Mr. BENNY. Were these fifty men whose votes were received entitled to vote if they had their names placed on the list? What I mean is, were they legal voters or voters in that precinct?

Mr. DRISCOLL. So far as it appears, they were not legal voters. In other words, they were prima facie, not legal, voters.

No man is a legal voter unless his name appears on this book a qualified legal voter, and so far as we know they have not been in the country three months or they might have been brought across the border that morning. They were simply voted. Their names were not on the list. They were not required to make affidavits to qualify them to vote. The laws were grossly violated by these election officers by taking all these votes and requiring no affidavit and——

Mr. BENNY. Was there anything in the case to show the election board knew these fifty men to be bona fide residents there who had voted at some other election?

Mr. DRISCOLL. There is nothing in the record to show that they knew or did not know. Their sworn obligation was not to take any vote from a man unless his name was on the list as a voter, and when they took those votes from these fifty or eighty-three men whose names were not on the list as voters they violated their oaths and the law every time.

Mr. BENNY. Was there anything to indicate anywhere in that case how those fifty men voted—whether for Connell or for Howell?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Well, that will come up by and by.

In addition to that: In Winton both the Second and Third wards are populated largely by foreigners, by Slavs, Huns, Poles, and Italians, and that was the season of the great strike in the anthracite mines, and those people were largely miners or helpers, and they were moving around all the time. The strike had been on, and there was very much moving out from one region to another to get work somewhere else, and it appeared that from 50 to 70 votes were cast in the names of men who had formerly lived in that district and who were out of the district on the day of election. In other words, there were from fifty to seventy personations, substitutions of voters in place of dead men, and all sorts of fraudulent and illegal votes.

Now, I will admit that the election officers might be fooled a few times, but I do not see how, if they were vigilant and honest and reasonably competent, they could be fooled so many times; and when they deliberately violated their obligation, violated their oath and the law in receiving from 50 to 83 votes from men whose names were not on the list, and who gave no affidavits showing their legal right to vote, we have the right to say they were intentionally crooked in receiving those 60 or 70 votes in the names of men who were not in that election district on that day.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes, certainly.

Mr. THAYER. As a matter of information, I understand that the county officers make out a voting list alphabetically which is given to the officers at the polling precinct.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes, sir; a registry list.

Mr. THAYER. I also understand, suppose the man's name was omitted by the assessor as he went on, his name will not appear on the voting list.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is right.

Mr. THAYER. Then if that man appears at the polling place with some witness with him who knew he was there a proper length of time, and his name should have been on the list——

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes, sir.

Mr. THAYER. He can make affidavit and would be entitled to vote?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. Is that name then written on the voting list in addition to the printed list?

Mr. DRISCOLL. No; I will tell you. They have what they call a registry list that is sent by the county commissioners to the election officers on or before the morning of the election. The names of the people are supposed to be on that list in alphabetical order. When the voting commences, the clerk writes down "John Smith," "James Jones," according as they come in and vote, and that is called the voting list, and the man to whom you refer could come in on election day and show by affidavit that he was a qualified and legal voter of that district, and he would be entitled to vote, and the election officers would be required to receive his vote.

Mr. THAYER. I understood that much; but what I want to know is whether it was incumbent on the election officers to write his name down on the voting list that was originally tendered them?

Mr. DRISCOLL. No; they should write it down on the voting list after he has voted, but not on the registry list.

Mr. THAYER. But his name would appear on some list, would it not?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. Now, has the committee investigated to see whether, in the borough of Winton, for instance, the names were on the original list?

Mr. DRISCOLL. As I said a minute ago, I anticipated the question the gentleman has asked me by saying that the people moved out of this district in droves during the time of the strike and had not moved back, and because they had not moved back there were other men brought in and substituted for them and voted in their places.

Mr. THAYER. Is it not a fact that this is made known to your mind simply because a few men went out around there in that borough and were unable to find the men whose names were on the voting list as living there? Isn't it a fact that it is mere hearsay of fathers and brothers and——

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman making a speech in my time.

Mr. THAYER. I am asking a question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will answer that question by and by.

Mr. THAYER. Will you answer the question now?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the law require the affidavit of which you speak to be filed with the county clerk?

Mr. DRISCOLL. It requires it to be filed with the prothonotary with the election returns.

Now, in addition to what I say, the election officers did that which was unlawful. In the Second Ward of Winton they added about fifty names, not to the polling list, but to the registry list which was sent them by the county commissioners. They had no business to interefere with the registry list, except to consult it and see that the men who came forward were qualified voters; but they did, against the law and against their duty, add fifty names in an unalphabetical order to that list.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not yield, Mr. Speaker, because the gentleman wants to make a speech instead of asking questions.

Now, gentlemen, we come to the borough of Winton, Third Ward, which is also attacked by the contestant for fraud. In this district the contestant's counsel claim there were 80 votes received by men whose names were not on the registry list, and in proof of whose right to vote no affidavits were filed. Now, there is no question about this. Mr. Ballantine, in the presence of Mr. Howell, in the hearing before the committee, admitted that 53 of these were correct, and Mr. James Conry, a Democratic judge of election of that district, said that no affidavits were taken and filed in that district.

Now, it appears, therefore, that so far as that duty was concerned the election officers did not attempt to discharge it at all. They let everybody go up, apparently, who wanted to, and vote, and when their names were not on the list they did not require affidavits of the right to vote, as required by law.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Very well.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would like to ask if in any of these cases that you have already cited where there was alleged illegal voting there was any protest made by any of the election officers?

Mr. DRISCOLL. It does not appear that any protest was made at any time.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Am I correct that there were both minority and majority inspectors present?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will tell you about that in a minute. In addition to this, 22 votes were received in the names of men who were not there, and 15 votes were shown to have been cast by men whose names did not appear on the voting list as returned by the election officers. Now, as I said before, when a man declares his intention to be naturalized, if not naturalized, the election assessor places before his name on this book the letters "D. I." and that means that the man has declared his intention to be naturalized.

But if these letters are here opposite the man's name on this list, it is a warning to the election officers that he can not vote without an affidavit. It should put them on guard. Yet they let about eleven of these men vote without any affidavits showing that they had gotten out their second papers or that they were legally qualified to vote.

Mr. THAYER. When these officers were called, were any of them asked questions as to whether any person coming there made an affidavit or not?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not quite understand the question.

Mr. THAYER. Was there a single officer asked the question whether parties coming there had made an affidavit?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why, certainly.

Mr. THAYER. I do not find any such thing in the record.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why, Mr. James Conry, the Democratic judge of election in the third district of Winton, swore that there were no affidavits taken at all.

Mr. THAYER. Did he not swear that there were none on file? Will the gentleman say that he swore none were taken?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes; that is what he said, as I understand it, that no affidavits were taken.

Mr. THAYER. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Well, I will not claim that I may not be mistaken in my recollection of what this record of several thousand pages shows. I will not claim that I may not be mistaken about anything, but that is my recollection of it, and I am giving it as I honestly believe it to be.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Conry did make that statement, that no affidavits were taken, because nobody was allowed to vote who was not registered. Therefore no affidavits were needed.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] and the Members of the House to the fact that I was correct in making the statement which I made, that Mr. Conry swore on the stand that no affidavits were taken from anybody in the Third Ward of Winton, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] corroborates what I say.

Mr. SHULL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. SHULL. Does the gentleman say that the laws of Pennsylvania prescribe that a voter behind whose name appears the letters "D. I." or "I. N." is required to make an affidavit before he is permitted to vote?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. CASSEL. Unless the voter presents his certificate.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes; they must qualify themselves by affidavit, and by their certificate of naturalization in addition if required. In other words, when the name is taken down in the spring he is not a legally qualified voter. He may become a legally qualified voter between that time and the election time in November. If so, he must show he has qualified himself by affidavit.

Mr. SHULL. I simply desire to ask the gentleman this question, as to whether the laws of Pennsylvania prescribe that he must make an affidavit before he is permitted to vote?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman once more?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. I get my information from the report of the majority, page 7, in which it states as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, County of Lackawanna, ss:

I, John S. Cummings, prothonotary of said county of Lackawanna in said Commonwealth——

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I object to any further reading of that in my time.

Mr. PALMER. That is a forged certificate.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is not in this district.

Mr. THAYER. I did not say anything about any particular district.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am talking about the third district.

Mr. THAYER. The gentleman is talking about something that I am not talking about. I want to set the gentleman right.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The gentleman from Massachusetts is talking about something that I am not talking about, and I insist upon having the floor.

Mr. THAYER. But I wish to correct the gentleman.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I object to any more interruption from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

Mr. THAYER. The gentleman objects to being corrected on his own report.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. In order to understand the position, and that the House may understand it, I wish to know if I am correct in my understanding the gentlemen from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] to say that where a voter's name is on the list with the letters "D. I.," showing he had declared his intention of becoming a citizen, he has to make an affidavit before he is qualified to vote, in order to vote legally?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why, certainly; yes, he has.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I think the gentleman will find that the law is that he does not have to make an affidavit.

Mr. DRISCOLL. He will have to show his naturalization papers.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Then it is only those whose names are not on the list. If the name is on the list and the man will show his proper papers, he will be entitled to vote, and when the election officer certifies that he did vote the presumption is that he had complied with the law.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am not sure, but if he obtained and showed his second papers that might qualify him without anything further.

Mr. PALMER. It does not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I think he must do something further. He must qualify himself by showing that he has paid the State and county tax as required by statute.

Mr. PALMER. And that he has resided in the district.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes; that he had resided in the district a certain length of time. If the man has simply declared his intention he may be entitled to vote, but before he can do so he must be taxed as a voter and he must show that he has paid his tax.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I do not wish to take up the gentleman's time, but it may save time for me to say that our position is that the man stands in the same attitude with any other whose name is on the list. An examination of the statute will show that the assessor makes no difference as to whether the man has declared his intention or has become a citizen, provided his name is on the list.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I must now decline to yield any further, because I wish to retain a part of my time until to-morrow; and I have taken up more time in opening this case than I intended to do.

I wish now to state a few things which were done or permitted to be done by the election officers in the Third Ward of Winton, to show how they conducted matters. For instance, Marian Dominick (p. 977) swears that he is an Italian, not naturalized; that he met Henry Lawlor, an election officer and friend of the contestee, and he says that Lawlor called him and asked him to come in and vote; he said he couldn't vote, and Lawlor said, "Go in anyway;" that he went in and voted, and Lawlor marked his ballot.

Paul Marriot (p. 1001) says that he is an Italian, not a voter, and was called by the big Lally boy (a friend of the contestee) and the following conversation occurred:

He asked me on the street; I stood on the street and he said: "Come in and vote." I said: "I can't vote; I got no citizen papers; I not a citizen myself." And he said: "That is all right; everybody votes this year." And he said: "Go in and vote." And I voted because he told me to. I had no paper.

Pesan Bastania (pp. 1016–1017) swears that he is an Italian, not naturalized and not qualified to vote. But five or six people pulled him into the booth and said: "Go on; go on." And he went in and voted.

Louis Neri (p. 1024) says that he is an Italian, not naturalized, paid no taxes, but he was hanging around the polls and voted. He gives evidence as follows:

Q. Who took you in to vote?—A. Nobody. Why, I was going for a growler of beer, and a fellow met me on the street and he said, "Did you vote?" and I said, "No;" and he said, "Go on in there and vote;" and I went in there, and he marked the card for me and gave it to me; and he said, "Put it in there;" and I put it in.

Gentlemen who will follow me will show that this is only a sample of what was done by wholesale in that district and permitted by these election officers.

But now, gentlemen, who got the benefit of these illegal votes? Was it Mr. Connell or was it Mr. Howell? Why, sir, Mr Connell's name was on the "ballot-reform" ticket and also on the straight Republican ticket. Mr. Howell's name was on the anti-machine ticket. Mr. Howell received 155 votes on the antimachine column; Mr. Connell, 24 votes on the "ballot-reform" column, but not one vote on the Republican column—not one.

Now, if those election officers—inspectors, clerks, judges, watchers—were there as Republicans, they did not vote the Republican ticket; and if they did not vote the Republican ticket it is fair to say that they were not very strenuous in the protection of Republican interests.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know whether it is not the fact that Mr. Connell got more votes at that precinct than Mr. McKinley?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not know as to that. It was claimed on the hearing that Mr. McKinley got so many votes; it was also claimed that at the next election, when the law was enforced, a Republican was elected in that district. Those facts are not in the record, as I understand, and are not material or admissible in this hearing.

Mr. CASSEL. My colleague will allow me to say that the "ballot-reform" ticket was a full Democratic ticket with the exception of Mr. Connell's name; consequently all the votes cast at that election were cast for the Democratic candidates for county officers and governor, and all the other officers with the exception of Mr. Connell and one candidate for judge. I repeat that the "ballot-reform" ticket was a full Democratic ticket with the exception of Mr. Connell's name.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether the committee agree to the assertion I am about to read from the views of the minority, page 2. I know nothing about the matter myself; I am simply asking the chairman to explain the facts as they exist. I read from the minority report:

In this particular case, however, even if there were as many illegal votes as the majority allege, and all of them should be deducted from the contestee, he would still have a majority.

Do the committee agree that that states the matter correctly?

Mr. DRISCOLL and others. No.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman then explain that matter?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I can not do so now, because I want to go on with the point I am discussing, but that will be explained later.

I want to say that in this district there were no people representing the Republican party. The bars were thrown down; the friends of Mr. Howell went out and drummed up from the highways and byways the fellows who were working the "growlers," and everybody else, naturalized or not; they rounded them up and corralled them, and ran them in and voted them. Mr. Howell got the benefit, I claim, of such conduct on the part of these officers; and no reliance can be placed on the return. It is permeated through and through with fraud and ought to be thrown out. No dependence can be placed on the action of the judges who permitted such performances.

OLD FORGE, FIRST DISTRICT.

The performances on the part of the election officers in this district capped the climax for carelessness, crookedness, and defiance of the law and their sworn obligations. Contestant's counsel claimed on the argument that there were 158 votes cast by persons whose names did not appear on the registry list and from whom no affidavits were taken in proof of their right to vote. Those names are set forth in their brief. The counsel of the contestee in his presence admitted 90, and the contestee himself is an attorney of record of the State of Pennsylvania. And such an admission as that ought to be of some weight with the Members of this House.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does not the gentleman know that Mr. Green, one of the counsel in the case, emphatically denied that statement?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not think he was the leading counsel, and I do not think the gentleman from South Carolina will say he was the leading counsel.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did he dispute that evidence?

Mr. DRISCOLL. He did afterwards. He disputed almost everything that was stated by his associate and the opposing counsel, and I do not think he understood the case very well himself, and I think the gentleman from South Carolina will agree with me in this regard.

A registry list, alphabetically arranged, was on the table in the presence of those officers. When a man came in to vote it was their duty to look at the list, and if that man's name was not there to require an affidavit in proof of his right to vote. Yet it is claimed that that duty was violated 158 times, and 90 of such violations are admitted. The certificate of the prothonotary of Lackawanna County established the fact that no affidavits were taken, showing that the election officers paid no attention to the elementary requirements of the law on their part. The following is a copy of that certificate:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
County of Lackawanna, ss:

I, John F. Cummings, prothonotary of said county of Lackawanna, in said Commonwealth, do hereby certify that among the returns of the election held in the said county of Lackawanna on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1902, which returns are now on file in my office pursuant to law, it appears that one affidavit only was filed from the first district of Old Forge borough, in said county, which affidavit is the oath of office taken by the election officers, and that no affidavit of any voter was filed from said district.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and have affixed the seal of court of common pleas of the said county of Lackawanna, at the city of Scranton, in the said county, this 12th day of January, A. D. 1904.

JOHN F. CUMMINGS,
Prothonotary of Lackawanna County.

In the views of the minority, a copy of this certificate is inserted in their remarks on the Second Ward of Winton by mistake. It is claimed that this certificate means nothing, yet it states distinctly that—

One affidavit only was filed from the first district of Old Forge borough, in said county, which affidavit is the oath of office taken by the election officers, and that no affidavit of any voter was filed from said district.

If several affidavits were filed, how could he truthfully state that there was only one? If he certified to a copy of all the returns from that district it would show only one affidavit, namely, the oath of the election officers. Our opponents speak of presumptions, etc., and suggest that if the certificate states that no affidavits are on file now it does not establish the fact that they never have been on file. In answer we say it is a fair presumption that the prothonotary properly performs his duty in protecting the files in his office. And if no affidavits of voters are contained in the returns from that district it is a fair presumption that no such affidavits were filed by the election officers.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. Whose duty was it to file these affidavits with the prothonotary—the election board?

Mr. DRISCOLL. The election boards—the election officers.

Mr. JOHNSON. In reference to the certificate which purports to show that, there is no evidence on file as to the time it was made.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I wish you would argue that in your own time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I just simply wished to ask that as a question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I wish you would argue that in your own time.

Again, when the contestant proved that 158 men had voted from whom no affidavits were taken, it was incumbent on the contestee or his counsel, when their turn came, to show if they could that the election officers attempted to discharge their duty by taking and filing some affidavits. This they failed to do, and the conclusion is therefore justified that no affidavits were taken. But that is not all.

According to the evidence about ten persons voted at that election in that district whose names did not appear on the voting list as returned by the election officers, and about eight persons were permitted to vote opposite whose names the letters "D. I." appeared on the registry list without filing affidavits, in conformity with the law, in proof of their right to vote. In this district a very large majority of the people are of foreign birth. Many of them are Poles. Frank Conowsky was a Pole, a Republican, and a ward leader among his people. The Pennsylvania law provides for watchers at elections. It says:

On the petition of five or more citizens of any election district, setting forth the fact that the appointment of overseers is a reasonable precaution to secure the purity and fairness of the election in said district, it shall be the duty of the court of common pleas of the proper county, all the law judges of the said court able to act at the time concurring, to appoint two judicious, sober, and intelligent citizens of the said district, belonging to different political parties, overseers of election to supervise the proceedings of election officers thereof, and to make report of the same as they may be required by the court. (Act January 30, 1874. Sec. 4 P. L., 33.)

Each party which has by its primary meeting, caucus, convention, or board sent to the proper officer a certificate of nomination, and each group of citizens which has sent to the proper officer a nomination paper as provided in sections 2 and 3 of this act, shall be allowed to appoint three electors to act as watchers in each voting place, without expense to the county, one of whom shall be allowed to remain in the room outside of the inclosed space. Each watcher shall be provided with a certificate from the county commissioners stating his name, the names of the persons who have appointed him, and the party or policy he represents; and no party or policy shall be represented by more than one watcher in the same voting room at any one time. Watchers shall be required to show their certificates when requested to do so. (Act of June 10, 1893, sec. 23, P. L., 419.)

Frank Conowsky was a regularly appointed watcher and had his certificate. During the early part of the day he was permitted to go inside the rail, mark ballots for those who were incompetent, and assist in the election. But during the day one Mr. Bonner, an attorney and friend of the contestee, called him and asked him who he represented. He said the Republican party. Bonner told him that unless he supported the Democratic party and Howell he would expose Conowsky's friend, Frank Appel. Conowsky refused, saying he was a Republican and would stand by the party. After that he was refused further admission in the booth and prevented from marking other ballots for his friends, although they continued to demand his assistance.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does my friend mean to tell this House that because some man out on the election ground approaches a voter and asks him to vote for a certain candidate and he refuses to do it, and then this man conveys a threat to expose one of his friends who does not vote that way, that that amounts to intimidation?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I mean to say this——

Mr. JOHNSON. And do you not find as a fact that Frank Conowsky did vote for William Connell? Is not that one of the aliunde facts put down by you?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why, I do not question that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then he did not intimidate him.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The gentleman can refer to that in his own time. The point I am making is that he was met by Mr. Bonner, he was asked to support Howell, he was told if he did not support Howell that his friend Appell would be exposed; that he refused to support Howell and said he would stand by the Republican party. Thereafter the election officers, who were all Democrats, threw him out, and would not let him mark any more tickets for his friends, showing that Bonner conveyed that knowledge to the election officers and they acted upon it. That is the point I am making.

Now, you can raise the screen and see how things were done in that first district of Old Forge. The judge of election was an elderly gentleman named Michael McGowan. The inspector duly chosen was a fellow named Tooley. Mr. McGowan was informed the night before election that Tooley could not act as inspector the next day, so the next morning Michael McGowan and P. F. Coyne, a Democrat, put their heads together and concluded there was nobody there that they could take who was satisfactory, and they sent for Michael Cafferty, who was some distance away. Michael Cafferty came. He was not on the registry list, he was not a qualified voter, yet they allowed him to vote without an affidavit showing his right to vote, as required by law. What next? John McGowan was a son of Michael McGowan, and he was a constable.

McAndrew, a devoted friend of the contestee, was deputy constable; McKenna, another friend of the contestee, was chief of police. There was no row or trouble in that district, and yet all these people—Tooley, Coyne, McKenna, McCafferty, Michael McEwen, John McGowan, and McAndrew—were all there bulldozing those Pollacks, shutting them out, not allowing Conowsky to mark the ballots for his friends, and acting in violation of every provision of the election law. They were strong partisans. McGowan said, I believe, he was a Howellite, first, last, and all the time. The bars were thrown down. They did everything in their power to direct the voters their way and let every Howell vote in without obstruction.

I simply say that that vote, the return of these election officers, does not import verity; that it is entitled to no credit; it should be thrown out. The ballot can not be purged, because you do not know where to commence or determine what is honest and right and what is dishonest and illegal, and therefore the only possible and reasonable thing is to throw out the whole poll.

Mr. BENNY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have got pretty nearly through, and I would rather not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DRISCOLL. We have cited in our report many authorities on this question, and I have cited some in my remarks here, and I will ask to have extended in the RECORD some more authorities on the same proposition. There is an abundance of authority showing it is the duty of the committee, and it is the duty of the House, where such gross frauds are perpetrated as were shown by the evidence here and where the whole returns are permeated and tainted with fraud, to throw them out and let the several parties prove their votes aliunde.

In 1864, in the contested-election case of Knox v. Blair, Thirty-eighth Congress, Mr. Henry L. Dawes, who submitted the majority and prevailing report in a contested-election case where the question of fraud was involved, said:

> When the result in any precinct has been shown to be "so tainted with fraud that the truth can not be deducible therefrom," then it should never be permitted to form a part of the canvass. The precedents, as well as the evident requirements of truth, not only sanction, but call for the rejection of the entire poll when stamped with the characteristics here shown. (1 Bart., 538.)

The same rule substantially was followed in Finley v. Walls (44th Cong., Smith, 389), where the committee reported (p. 714, Rowell's Digest) that—

> The law is that where fraud is proved to have been committed by the officers of an election in conducting the election no reliance can be placed upon any of their acts, and their return must be rejected as wholly unreliable. The party claiming under the election must prove the actual vote in some other way.

In Van Wyck v. Green (41st Cong., 2 Bart., 641) the report of the committee contains the following paragraph:

> While the committee should be slow to throw out the whole vote of a ward or district, nevertheless, if the facts and circumstances show that the inspectors of the registry and election knowingly produced frauds, and violated the election laws, and permitted illegal voting, and the polls can't be purged, the whole vote should be thrown out.

To the same effect are the reports and decisions by the House in the case of Wise v. Young, Fifty-fifth Congress; Murray v. Elliott, Fifty-fourth Congress; Robinson v. Harrison, Fifty-fourth Congress, and many other cases which may be cited.

In Noyes v. Rockwell (52d Cong., Rowell's Digest, 476) the report of that part of the committee which was sustained by the House contains the following statement:

> Let it be remembered that fraud can rarely, if ever, be proved by direct evidence, and that the rule is whenever a sufficient number of independent circumstances which point to its existence are clearly established a prima facie case of its existence is made, and if this is not met by explanation or contradiction it becomes conclusive.

This rule is generally followed in contested-election cases and in courts.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will be through in a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Now, according to the report of this committee, if you find that these three districts should be thrown out, and I believe you will, that will leave Mr. Howell a plurality of only 8.

If that is true, neither my friend from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], my friend from Texas [Mr. RANDELL], nor my friend from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAIN] will claim that Mr. Howell was elected, because they will not question——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to a question? I understand the gentleman from New York——

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in conformity to the usual custom, has notified the gentleman that his hour has expired.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will not speak any longer, because I want a few minutes to-morrow.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DRISCOLL. If it is charged to your time.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. I mean that it shall be charged to my time. I understand you to say that the registry books that you have been calling attention to were in the hands of the election officers. Did you not say that, and do you not desire to have the House believe that those registration books have been in the hands of the election officers?

Mr. DRISCOLL. There is——

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. Say yes or no.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will not say yes or no. I will say what I please, if you please.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. I have asked you the direct question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am not on the witness stand. These are supposed to be certified copies of books which were in the hands of the election officers. With reference to the Third Ward of Winton, the list is not alphabetically arranged. I meant to state that in my remarks, but forgot it. Now, with reference to that, I am not sure whether that is a certified copy of the registry list or a certified copy of the assessor's list which got in here by mistake. At any rate, it is not alphabetically arranged. However, that does not excuse the election officers for not examining the list and allowing any person to vote except those who appeared on it as qualified voters.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. You stated in the majority report that that book was once in the hands of the election officers. You can determine the truth of this statement in your own time, and if the county commissioners of Lackawanna County say that that book there was ever in the hands of the election officers I will move to seat the contestant.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Where do we say that in our report?

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. On page 6.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What part?

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. On the top.

> A large number of names were added to the registry list of this ward by the election officers, in violation of the law and their duty.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I did not say to this book. I said this book is a copy, and would show they were added to the list and that they had no business——

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. I simply want to understand the gentleman, if he insists that that book was in the hands of the election officers.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I said they were added to the registration list.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. By whom?

Mr. DRISCOLL. By the election officers.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. Well, it must have been in the hands of the election officers, then.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Either this or the original, I think, must have been.

Mr. MCLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield sixty minutes to my colleague, Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. JOHNSON. An investigation of election contests in this House reveals the fact that it was fifty years after the Government was organized before there was ever any intimation or suggestion that an election case was influenced either in the discussion or in the decision by political bias. I approached the investigation of this case absolutely without personal feeling, absolutely without political bias, determined as far as lay in my power to find the truth. After long, painstaking investigation I am here to tell you the truth as I understand it. What you may do is of no consequence to me except that I want you to do right. In criticising the report of the majority, I want it distinctly understood that I do not impugn their motive or their honesty. I can differ from a man without doubting either his integrity or his good sense. My criticism will be based upon what I believe to be sound principles of law. I have known most excellent judges for whom I had the highest respect to render decisions that were reversed upon almost every material point.

I want, before I take up this case in detail, to say that it is a dangerous doctrine, it is a damnable doctrine to throw out entire precincts in an election. You may find that where partisan zeal has controlled it has been done, but I challenge you to show where courts of law have thrown out entire precincts. The law which is laid down in the books, the law which must commend itself to our sense of justice, is that if it is possible to purge a ballot box of illegal votes it shall be done. I do not stand for fraud; I detest it whether it is in politics or in the private walks of life. In this case there is absolutely no reason for saying that fraud was shown to such an extent as to justify throwing out entire precincts. Every illegal ballot can be ascertained. The contestant has set forth with great particularity the name of every voter that he claims cast an illegal ballot. He has referred to the testimony upon which he bases that contention.

There is nothing in the way of this committee—there is nothing in the way of this House taking up those names one by one and determining the facts judicially whether the alleged vote was illegal, and if it was illegal, and the testimony shows for whom it was cast, deduct it from the candidate who received it. If the testimony fails to show for whom it was cast, then adopt the sound rule of law that says that illegal votes, in the absence of testimony showing how they were cast, shall be deducted from the candidates in proportion to their legal votes. I want in my remarks to incorporate certain citations from authorities in regard to the law upon this point. I shall not weary your patience by reading it here, but you can read it to-morrow morning if you see fit.

In Digest of Contested-Election Cases, page 654, it was held that—

"When contestant has shown prima facie a number of illegal votes which if cast for contestee would wipe out his majority, the burden does not shift to contestee to show that they were not cast for him, but remains with contestant."

And at page 355, in same case:

"The burden of proof, even if the doctrine of declaring an uncertain election void be adopted, is, we think, as stated by the minority (the minority report was adopted by the House), on the contestant to show that more illegal votes than the returned majority of the sitting Member were cast, and either that they were cast for the sitting Member or that it is impossible to ascertain for whom they were cast, and that this impossibility is an actual impossibility arising from the circumstances of the case, and which could not have been remedied by the use of due diligence, and not an impossibility arising wholly from the absence of evidence that could have been taken. The party having the burden can not by his own neglect create the impossibility."

In Le Moyne v. Farwell, (44th Cong., Digest of Election Cases, p. 711) it was stated:

"That where fraud is shown to exist the poll shall not be rejected unless it is impossible to purge it of the fraud. It being shown that very many illegal votes had been received with the fraudulent connivance of the judges of election, and there being definite proof that at least 252 of the votes shown by the numbered ballots in the box to have been cast for contestee were illegally and fraudulently cast, the committee deducted these 252 votes from the vote of contestee."

And on page 728 further said:

"The exclusion of an entire poll is the very last resort, and it must never be done where there is any rational means by which the illegal votes can be eliminated."

In Taylor v. Reading (41st Cong., Digest of Election Cases, p. 711) it was held that—

"Fraud to be eliminated, if possible, without rejecting the returns."

"Where contestant proved that more votes were cast for him than were returned for him, and there were circumstances indicating fraud, the committee preferred not to reject the polls, but corrected the vote according to the proof."

In Burch v. Van Horn (40th Cong., Digest of Election Cases, p. 215) it is stated:

"As in this case the law furnished contestant with the name of every rejected voter and the candidate for whom he offered to vote, it would have been very easy for him to have proved the facts alleged by particular and specific evidence if they were true, and under such circumstances the production of indefinite and inconclusive evidence indicated inability to produce any other.

"The committee consider also that in order to unseat a Member of this House who has the regular certificate of election, and who is conceded to have received a majority of several hundred votes of the votes received and counted, they should be able to report whose votes were excluded that ought to have been counted; that it would not do for the committee or for the House to say that out of 2,500 rejected voters, all of whose names are unknown, they are satisfied that enough were legal voters and ought to have been counted to give the contestant a majority."

In Atkinson v. Pendleton (51st Cong., Digest of Election Cases, p. 712) it is held that—

"Returns which are tainted with fraud can not be made the foundation of the title to a seat in the House. The result should be purged of the fraud if practicable and the poll only thrown out when no other alternative remains but to give effect to the fraud or to reject the poll."

In the New Jersey case, as reported in the Digest of Contested-Election Cases, page 651, it is held that the burden of proof is on the contestant, even to the proof of a negative. It holds that "the distinction between the controversy at the polls and that before the committee is manifest. At the polls the voter is a party. When the polls are closed and an election is made the right of the party elected is complete. He is entitled to the returns, and when he is admitted to his seat there is no known principle by which he can be ejected except upon the the affirmative proof of a defect in his title.

Whoever seeks to oust him must accomplish it by proving a case. The difficulties in his path can form no possible reason why the committee should meet him halfway. The rule of reason requires that he should fully make out his case, even though it involve the proof of a negative.

In Bromberg v. Haralson (44th Cong., Digest of Contested Election Cases, p. 652), it is stated that:

"The burden of proof is always upon the contestant or the party attacking the official returns. The presumption is that the officers charged by law with the duty of ascertaining and declaring the result have discharged that duty faithfully."

In Cessna v. Myers (42d Cong., Digest of Contested Election Cases, p. 652) it is held that "the burden is upon the party attacking the legality of a vote to prove that the person whose vote is in question, voted, that the vote was for the competitor, and that the voter was lacking in some legal qualification."

In Butler v. Lehman (37th Cong., Digest of Contested Election Cases, p. 652) it is declared that:

"Allegations involving charge of crime must be established beyond a reasonable doubt."

"When a contestant makes a charge of incorrectness of returns, which involves a direct charge of crime against the election officers, the would in strict law be required to establish the charge by the same degree of proof required in a criminal case."

In Chaves v. Clover (40th Cong., Digest of Election Cases, p. 712) it is held that:

"Where it was proved that returns and poll books had been altered so as to show several hundred votes for contestee which had not been cast, the committee unanimously deducted the votes thus fraudulently added."

In Abbott v. Frost (44th Cong., Digest of Election Cases, p. 712) it is held that:

"Where it was charged that a large number of persons whose names were marked on the check list as voting did not vote, and some witnesses swore that their names were the same as those marked on the list and that they had not voted, and it was proved that a large number of persons marked could not be found in the ward by a diligent search two months after the election, and that many of them were not on the assessor's list, the committee agreed, as a compromise, to deduct 105 from the contestee's vote, the majority holding that the charges of fraud were sustained, the minority holding that they were not sustained."

In Koontz v. Coffroth (39th Cong., Digest of Election Cases, p. 720) the law is declared to be that—

"It is the duty of the committee to approach as nearly as possible the ballot box, and by an examination of all the testimony see that no legal voter is deprived of his just right to the elective franchise. * * * This committee and the House are not circumscribed by the formalities that regulate the proceedings of a board of return judges."

In English v. Hilborn, (53d Cong., Digest of Contested Election Cases, p. 721) it is declared that—

"The prime object in all such cases is, if possible, to ascertain who was the people's choice at the election in question."

In Wallace v. McKinley (48th Cong., Digest of Election Cases, p. 722) it i stated that—

"It is not sufficient to doubt the illegality of a vote, but conviction of its illegality should be reached to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt."

In Hurd v. Romeis (49th Cong., Digest of Election Cases, p. 727) it is held that—

"In the absence of proof as to how illegal votes were cast, they should either be allowed to stand or deducted from all the candidates pro rata."

In Todd v. Jayne (38th Cong., Digest of Contested Election Cases, p. 727) it is stated that—

"Where more than half the votes cast in a precinct were illegal, but from the evidence it was possible to tell the largest number that could have been illegal, and for whom they were cast, the committee rejected these votes and counted the rest."

In Barnes v. Adams (41st Cong., Digest of Election Cases, p. 727) it is held that—

"The rule is well settled that the whole vote of a precinct should not be thrown out on account of illegal votes having been cast, if it be practicable to ascertain the number of illegal votes, and the person for whom cast, in order to reject them and leave the legal votes to be counted. Legal votes are not to be thrown out in order to get rid of illegal votes unless necessity requires it as the only means of preventing the consummation of a fraud upon the ballot box."

In Barnes v. Adams (41st Cong., Digest of Contested Election Cases, p. 720) it is stated that—

"Where it was certain that illegal votes were cast, but definite proof was not made as to their number, the committee said: The presumption is always in favor of the legality of a vote which has been admitted by the proper officers; and since all elections in Kentucky are viva voce, and since the record shows how each person votes, it would not, we think, be too much to require contestant to prove the want of residence of such persons as he claims illegally voted for contestee."

Now, Mr. Speaker, the majority of the committee have found that fraud was so gross, so palpable, that the election returns are absolutely without verity, and they have therefore thrown out three precincts entirely. Even after that was done the contestee still had a majority of 8 votes. They then resorted to an effort to establish legal votes at the rejected precincts for the contestant by testimony aliunde. They find as a fact, and want you to vote as a fact, that there were 32 legal voters at those precincts who voted for the contestant. A little later I want to call attention to the testimony upon which that finding is based. Twenty-nine of the 32 alleged legal votes are proved by one man.

If you are in search of truth, I ask you as lawyers to read that man's testimony and his cross-examination.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does it make any difference particularly as to the proof of the aliunde vote either for Connell or against Howell above 10. For instance, if these three districts are thrown out, that leaves Howell 8 plurality. One illegal vote was shown to have been cast for Connell, and therefore 10 votes either taken away from Howell's claim or added to Connell's claim will seat Connell. Isn't that so?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then what difference does it make about the 32 votes?

Mr. JOHNSON. Your committee, acting in a judicial capacity, bring in a report to this House which you expect this House to adopt as a judicial decision, and your committee have found that there were 32, and I want the House to examine that testimony upon which that finding is based. It is as good to prove 32 as it is to prove 8, but it does not prove either 8 or 32.

Now, gentlemen, looking around this Chamber reminds me of a story that I read of a lawyer. He was employed in a very important case involving a large sum of money. He studied the case very thoroughly; he traveled several hundred miles to the court of appeals in order to argue the case for his client. When he rose to address the court some of the judges were reading their morning papers, some of them were writing notes, and all of them seemed to be utterly indifferent. The lawyer stopped, and the chief justice said, "Proceed." The lawyer said, "Your honors, I have given a great deal of attention to this case; I have traveled several hundred miles to argue it; I think I can say with becoming modesty that I know more about this case than your honors on the bench. But if your honors on the bench will honor me with your attention until I shall have concluded my remarks, I have no doubt but that your honors will know more about this case than I do." [Laughter.] It is useless to add that he had their attention thereafter.

Now, gentlemen, the majority of the committee recommends that the Second Ward of Winton Borough be thrown out entirely because the election officers were guilty of such gross, palpable fraud that absolutely no verity can be given to their returns. They give as their reasons: First, because the election managers, in violation of the law and in violation of their duty, added a large number of names to the registry list; second, that the election officers allowed a large number of men to vote without filing affidavits whose names were not on the registration list; third, that the election officers allowed fifty men to vote in the names of men who were not present and who did not vote; fourth, that there were substitutions and repetitions.

Now, let me call your attention to the evidence, if you want to decide this case as judges. The record in this case does not reveal the names of these election officers. Just stop and think of it! The record does not show who the election officers were at that precinct. The testimony does not show that a single man who voted at that precinct or a single man who was present that day has gone on the stand and testified to one single utterance, to one single action of these men. Is that not a remarkable statement? That you are called upon to throw out a precinct when even the names of the men who conducted the election do not appear in the evidence.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It was contended that the election officers were guilty of fraud and lawlessness. Why did not the contestee call them to apologize or explain if they could? They were his friends.

Mr. JOHNSON. But you have not shown who they were. The testimony does not show who they were. The testimony does not show the name of a single manager of the election in the Second Ward of Winton. It does not show whether they were Democrats, Republicans, or ballot-reform men. There is not a word of testimony as to whose friends they were. Nobody has come upon the stand and said that these men did anything that was improper. No man has said that they gave utterance to any expression that indicated partiality, fraud, or anything else. Nobody has said anything about them or who they were. They were not attacked in the evidence, and there was nothing for them to explain. The majority of this committee has asked you to find, as a fact, that these men were guilty of such fraud that you can not believe their returns. The committee do this on inferences drawn from poll books and registry lists, suggested for the first time by argument of counsel. Do you believe it? Not as politicians, but as lawyers, do you believe it?

Mr. PALMER. Does not the gentleman believe that if the election officers had been square and honest the contestee would have called them and taken their testimony when, at least, a prima facie case had been made out?

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no prima facie case here.

Mr. PALMER. Yes; because they received votes and put the names on the registry list without taking any affidavit.

Mr. JOHNSON. I presume the gentleman is a lawyer; I think I have seen him on the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. PALMER. An alleged lawyer. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to say this, that the man who attacks an election assumes the burden of proof, and he can not stop short of proving his case. I deny, as a proposition of law, that any party in a court of justice who has assumed the burden of proof can shift the burden upon the opposite party to show that his alleged facts are not true if he merely raises a suspicion and does not prove his allegations.

Mr. PALMER. If the defendant comes into court and confesses that a part of the plaintiff's claim is true, then the plaintiff is not called upon to prove that, is he?

Mr. JOHNSON. Why, no.

Mr. PALMER. Very well; in this case the contestee confessed that 50 of these votes——

Mr. JOHNSON. He did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. PALMER. Excuse me; he did.

Mr. JOHNSON. He did not.

Mr. PALMER. He confessed that 50 of these votes that were received in the Second Ward of Winton were received from voters not on the registration list.

Mr. JOHNSON. He did not confess anything of the kind.

Mr. PALMER. Well, the poll list and the registration list compared show it, and that is in testimony in this case.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well; that is a matter of argument.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What does the gentleman mean by saying that the contestee did not admit that there were 50 votes received by men whose names are not on the registration list. Was not that admitted in the committee by Mr. Ballentine in the presence of Mr. Howell?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; it was not. Mr. Howell was not present. Mr. Howell's mother had died and he had gone to Pennsylvania.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman admit that Mr. Ballentine admitted it?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And that Mr. Ballentine was the principal attorney throughout the whole case, from beginning to end, and knew more about the case than anyone else.

Mr. JOHNSON. He admitted that there were 50 illegal votes, not that fifty now-registered men voted. A vote might be illegal for reasons unknown to the managers.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does not the gentleman believe that he knew more about the case than Mr. Green or anybody else?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; he did not know as much about it as I do.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman not think that he knew more about it than Mr. Green?

Mr. JOHNSON. I don't know anything about that. I have examined the records carefully. Now, on that point, you are all lawyers. I admit that a lawyer can bind his client by an admission in a pleading. I admit that a lawyer can bind his client by an admission in writing entered upon the minutes of the court. That is all right; but to tell me that when a lawyer is arguing a case before a judge, if he misstates the facts and the record shows that he misstates the facts, the judge is bound to decide the case by what the lawyer said and not by what the record shows, is a new sort of justice to me. That is the way it happened. In the argument of the case this lawyer did say that there were 50 illegal votes at that precinct, but that does not bind anybody. The record says otherwise. We are trying the case on the record.

Mr. WEBB. Did he say they were fraudulently given?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; he did not.

Mr. PALMER. On page 18 of the contestee's brief I find this statement. He is speaking about the Second Ward of Winton Borough:

> An examination of the list of voters who voted at this election and a comparison with the registration list shows that no persons voted who were not registered. Therefore no affidavits were taken by the election officers.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. That is the reason that the lawyer gave for admitting the fact that no affidavits were taken, because nobody voted there who was not on the registration list.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not very much more time, and I do not want to get off on side issues. I want to argue this case. The majority of the committee quote that as an admission of counsel that no affidavits were taken. Why, gentlemen, if you are going to quote that for anything, quote it for all it is worth. He makes two affirmative declarations. One is that no affidavits were taken and the other is that nobody voted who was not on the registry list. If you are going to take his statement about one, take it about the other.

Mr. PALMER. The comparison of the list shows that is not true.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now then, I want to show the House something. Here is a copy of a registration book, certified here by the county commissioners of Lackawanna County. A majority of the committee in this case have found as a fact that the election officers in the Second Ward of Winton were corrupt, were fraudulent in their conduct in that they have added the names of fifty men to that registration list in violation of the law and in violation of their duty.

Why, gentlemen, that is a serious charge. I undertake to say there is not any more proof of that fact than there is that the honored Speaker who presides over this House assassinated William McKinley.

It is hard to argue things when there is absolutely no evidence on which to base them. There is that book [exhibiting book]; the names are alphabetically arranged, but at the end of the book there are about fifty names that are not alphabetically arranged. The county commissioners of Lackawanna County certify that this is a correct copy of the registration made up in that county in May, 1902. Have they certified to a lie? Is their certificate proof? If it is, then this list of voters was made up in May, 1902, and not on the election day. Yet the majority of the committee find as a fact, and they want you to so vote, that these men were guilty of fraud and corruption because they added fifty names to that book. Are you going to do it?

Now, I want to go a step further.

Mr. YOUNG. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG. Waiving for a moment the question of any illegal votes in this borough, is there anything in the evidence tending to show that the returns of the election officers are anything but a true statement of the votes actually cast, whether legal or not?

Mr. JOHNSON. Nobody questioned the returns until the lawyers did it in the argument and the committee did it in their report. No one has testified that the men did not count the votes openly and publicly and fairly.

Now, let me get back to this book and go one step further, my friends. I want to call your attention to the fact that the county commissioners of Lackawanna County say that that is a certified list of the registration as made up in May, 1902. If it was made up in May, 1902, and these names were put at the back of it, who did it? Certainly not the election officers. But more than that—now listen—the election officers at that precinct never had this book in their possession, and they never had in their possession the book from which this is copied. Then how in the name of common sense and common reason are you going to say that these men added those names and were guilty of fraud?

What did the election officers have? The election officers, under the law of Pennsylvania, had a certified copy that was made from the registration list. That copy that the election officers had is not introduced in evidence. Let me be understood—the county commissioners made for the election officers in the Second Ward of Winton a certified copy of the registration list. When managers got through with the election, do you know what they did with that certified copy? They did not send it back to the office of the county commissioners, where this book comes from; they put it in the ballot box. That is where it is. That is where it has been ever since the night of the 4th of November, 1902. And the ballot boxes are in the possession of the contestant, and he did not open them. He had them impounded. He gave notice that he was going to open them, yet they have not been opened to this day.

Now, gentlemen, how are you going to find that these election officers allowed anybody to vote whose name was not on the list that they had unless you have in evidence what they did have? You must either have before you the registration list that they went by or you must at least have a copy of that list.

Now, then, that list being in the hands of the contestant, or, rather, it being in the custody of the court on his motion, and as he has not introduced it, although he said he would, are you going to find that these managers of election allowed people to vote whose names were not on the list that you have never seen?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why does the gentleman say that that book is in the possession of the contestant? Is it not in the hands of the court officers, and was not one of them selected by the contestant and the other by the contestee?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is not that true?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; they are in the possession of the court. They were impounded by the contestant, and he gave notice that he was going to open those boxes. He has not done it, and the contestee was before our committee begging with tears in his eyes that these boxes be opened, and your committee refused that request, and the contestant objected to it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did you not vote on that proposition against letting in that evidence?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I did not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did you not vote with us that they should not be received?

Mr. JOHNSON. I voted that we should not count those ballots—certainly I did. But I never objected, I do not object now, to the boxes being opened and these lists produced. This feature of the case was not mentioned.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not true that they are in the possession of the court, and that one party has as much right to them as the other?

Mr. JOHNSON. But the contestant gave notice that he was going to open them; he had them impounded.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not know when that notice was given.

Mr. JOHNSON. The record shows it, anyway.

You in this House are asked to find as a matter of fact that the election officers allowed fifty men to vote whose names were not on the registration list, and you have not produced before this House the list that the registration officers had or a copy made from it. If you want to find that they allowed fifty men to vote whose names were not on that list, that is your affair. The answer to that may be that the election managers had a certified copy from the office of the county commissioners, and this being a certified copy from the same source it may be claimed that the two papers are alike. Let me ask you this: Is it not as fair and as much in reason to assume that some clerk in the county commissioners' office, in consideration of $5, added names to that list that ought not to be there, as it is to assume that five sworn officers have violated their oaths of office? You can take whichever horn of the dilemma you please.

Then, again, they say that fifty men were allowed to vote in the names of men who were registered, but who were not themselves present and did not vote. There are two kinds of testimony to prove this. Listen. They hired a man to go out through the precinct, not some man who was familiar with the people there, but they hired a man, and the testimony shows it, and he went out, and if he found the voter he reported the fact that he had found the man, and that the man did not vote at the Second Ward of Winton, for he told him so. Do you catch that idea? This man who went out to hunt up testimony found John Smith and John Jones and thirty or forty other men, and he came back before the commissioners and swore that those men did not vote at Winton on the 4th day of November, 1902, because he had seen them; had talked to them, and they had told him that they did not vote there. Now, as lawyers, are you going to find, as a fact, upon incompetent testimony like that that these men were guilty of fraud and violated their oaths of office? If you want to find it, it is all right.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Were any of these fifty men examined?

Mr. JOHNSON. Not one of them.

Mr. KLUTTZ. They were all supposed to be right there?

Mr. JOHNSON. He said he found them and talked with them, and found out from them that they did not vote.

Mr. KLUTTZ. And yet they were not called?

Mr. JOHNSON. Not one of them.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did they make up in that way the 200 that they contend were illegally cast—these men you are speaking of?

Mr. JOHNSON. The testimony as to how they voted was that way, but I will say to the gentleman from Maine that here is the point: The committee have found that the election officers at the Second Ward of Winton were guilty of fraud, in that they allowed fifty men to vote in the names of registered voters who were not present and did not vote. In other words, you might be a registered voter and somebody voted in your name. That is what the majority say happened, and they prove it by sending a man out into the precinct, and he found a great number of these men. He says he talked with them. He came back before the commissioner, and his testimony is: "I found John Smith, and I found John Jones; I found Peter Smalls, and they did not vote in this ward on the 4th day of November, 1902, because they told me so." They did not produce the voters to prove that they did not vote, but they produced this one man, who went all over the ward and testified for everybody.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do you mean to say that is all the evidence the committee have to sustain that proposition?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the evidence upon which one class is based, and there is one other. Now, this fellow went out and inquired——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is the other?

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me explain it. He went out and inquired in the district. He says he did. He comes back and he says: "I could not find Mr. Littlefield; I could not find Mr. William Jones; I could not find Mr. John Johnson, but from the best information I could get after making thorough inquiry I am satisfied that they were not here on the 4th of last November."

Mr. YOUNG. How long after the election was that investigation made?

Mr. JOHNSON. That was in February, 1903, I think. Now, gentlemen, that is the kind of testimony upon which the finding is based that fifty men voted in the names of other men.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do you mean to say that is all the evidence the committee have?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is all the evidence there is as to forty-six of them. I am going to tell you about the other four.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Supposing John Smith was a registered voter and on election day some man voted in place of John Smith. The contestant wants to show that John Smith was not there on election day, and that somebody else was voted in his place.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. He sends out that man to investigate. He investigates thoroughly, and comes back and says that John Smith was not in the ward at that time. Now, of course that is not all of the evidence that might be introduced, but you could take every householder in that district and have their evidence and prove it by every man that John Smith was not living at his house, and he would have to prove it. That would be satisfactory, but they have only taken the proof of this man who has investigated it.

If they found that John Smith was there, was it not the duty of the other side to show by some one man he was there on election day?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have already said that you are trying to shift the burden of proof by bringing in incompetent testimony.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You ask an impossibility.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, gentlemen, hear this: A man goes out into the ward and comes back and tells the court, "From the best information that I can get this man was not there." It is hearsay evidence; how far removed the Lord only knows; I do not. He may have gone to James Smith's wife and she told him that her husband told her that John Jones told him that his wife told him that her mother told her that her daughter-in-law told her that her son did not vote on that day. That is the kind of testimony it is. If this House wants to accept it and act on it and find upon that sort of evidence that these men did not vote, but that somebody voted in their names and the managers of election acted fraudulently, then you have the right to do it.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Was there any evidence who hired him?

Mr. JOHNSON. The testimony is that he was hired to hunt that matter up.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Was there any evidence of illegal voting?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know of any. When you come to examine this kind of thing——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You do not claim that it was improper to hire him to do this?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not say that the man was not properly hired to go out and hunt information. I do say his conclusions are not competent evidence. He should have brought his informants to tell what they knew. They rely on a hired man's conclusions. He knows nothing. They do not prove it by the man's mother, his brother, or somebody who knows of his own knowledge that some man moved out of the ward the week before the election.

Mr. KENNEDY. I just want to ask the gentleman why the minority of the committee found the facts of the majority were correct as to this dead man. There was nobody to confirm that statement.

Mr. JOHNSON. The man testified that the fellow was dead, and that he went to the funeral. That is the very best of evidence.

Mr. KENNEDY. There is no testimony that he saw the man in the coffin.

Mr. JOHNSON. The witness said the man's father said that he was dead, and "I went to the funeral." I consider that competent evidence. [Laughter.]

You see when I strike legal testimony I recognize it.

Now, for instance, four men whose names appeared in that precinct as having voted appear on the stand as witnesses and say that they did not vote. Now, as to these, nobody contradicts their evidence. Why were the others who, it is alleged, did not vote called as witnesses? In many precincts in my district the election officers know every man who votes at that precinct; they know his wife and how many children he has, how old they are, how much land he has, how many horses and what color they are. I say that in country precincts like that, if the election officers were to allow three men to vote whose names are not on the list or allow somebody else to vote in their names, I would say that it was fraud. But what are the facts here? This election took place in a mining district, where nearly every man that voted was a miner; where it is matter of common knowledge, and the record in this case shows it, that the men who employed these miners do not know their names—they know them by numbers. Now, these men came rushing out of the mines, for the testimony is that they voted after the day's work was done. They came out from the bowels of the earth, covered with soot and coal dust, having earned their bread by the sweat of their faces that day, and they marched up to the polls, called out their names, and when the name was found on the registry list they voted. Are you going to hold that because four men of that class, four men who are not known by the men for whom they labor from day to day, should be so well known to the election officers that they can not be imposed upon?

Then there is one other question that I want to refer to. There is not any legal evidence here that any nonregistered man voted who did not make affidavit as the law requires.

The law of Pennsylvania provides that if a man applies to vote and his name is not on the registration list he shall not be allowed to vote unless he makes affidavit setting forth certain facts. We are bound to assume the election officers did their duty, and that if anybody applied to vote and his name was not on the list the managers required him to give an affidavit. How did they find the facts in this case that the election officers did not do it? They do not find it from any evidence in that regard. Nobody said anything about it. Although the contestant called 6,500 witnesses, nobody testified that election officers did not take affidavits; nobody testified that men were allowed to vote whose names were not on the list that the election officers had. During the argument of the case, when the contestant's counsel argued with all the force that was in him that these election precincts were fraudulent because there were names on the poll list which were not on the registration list and that no affidavits were taken from nonregistered voters, he discovered that he had failed to prove that the affidavits were not taken. Then what happened? After the case was argued he went back to the State of Pennsylvania, and on the 12th day of January, 1904, he procured from the prothonotary of that county a certificate to the effect that he had looked and he could not find any affidavits there.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That applies to Old Forge.

Mr. JOHNSON. There were two, were there not?

Mr. DRISCOLL. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then, you have got nothing as to Ward 2 of Winton. Now, gentlemen, an officer who has custody of papers can certify copies thereof. What is the reason of the rule? Those are public papers; they are in a public place for public uses, and it is not proper that they should be carried all over the country; and the law has wisely provided that they shall have a place of deposit, that they shall be in the care of a custodian, and when they are needed that custodian under his oath of office can furnish certified copies.

One can not prove by the clerk of a court on a mere certificate that there is no judgment against a given man in a certain county. He can not say that there was a defective paper there and in his judgment it was not a judgment. He must certify the paper. He can not certify that there is no paper. Then let us go a step further. He certifies that these affidavits are not in his office. Suppose we admit that his statement of a fact in this form establishes that fact. Presumptions do not go backwards. You may prove that a man is crazy to-day. That is absolutely no evidence that he was crazy ten years ago, and you could not upon that evidence upset a will executed ten years ago or one year ago.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But the certificate recites they were not filed.

Mr. JOHNSON. He goes further than offering a certificate that it is not there; he makes himself a witness to say they were never there, and ought to have been sworn and examined and cross-examined just like any other witness.

Mr. YOUNG. May I interrupt the gentleman for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. YOUNG. The gentleman from New York says that it was the duty of the election officers to file with the prothonotary these affidavits.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is.

Mr. YOUNG. Is there any evidence that the election officers filed with the prothonotary all the affidavits they got?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have tried as scrupulously as is in the power of mortal man to consider this case on the evidence, not on arguments of counsel; but I will say it was admitted on both sides that election officers frequently dumped these affidavits in the ballot box. I do not know whether they did or not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I think Mr. Ballentine claimed; I do not believe Mr. Holgate admitted it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Holgate admitted it, and I will make you recollect it. You remember when Mr. Green came and argued the fact there were no fraudulent votes Mr. Holgate jumped up and said: "If you will take back the admission Ballentine made yesterday, I will take mine back." He pleaded the baby act. But I do not care anything about it. I say that if you were to admit that that certificate was competent as testimony, and if you were to admit these affidavits are not on file there now—and even that they never were on file—it is not any presumption that the election officers did not take them. They may have taken them and neglected to file them.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It was their duty to file them, and the presumption is that they discharged that duty.

Mr. JOHNSON. The presumption of law is that they filed them in the clerk's office. The neglect to file them would be irregularity, but the neglect to take them would be a crime. If you are going to presume anything against a man, you must presume an irregularity rather than a crime.

Mr. PALMER. The law is that they must file them——

Mr. JOHNSON. I say they must go to the prothonotary's office.

Mr. PALMER. Whose duty is it to send them there?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is the duty of the election officers.

Mr. PALMER. And the presumption is that they did their duty.

Mr. JOHNSON. You say that they did not do their duty, and that they acted so fraudulently that you can not believe anything they say.

Now, then, I want to go on. The majority of the committee say that because the election officers allowed men whose names had "D. I." opposite them to vote without taking affidavits that they are guilty of fraud. I want to call your attention to the law.

The law of Pennsylvania does not require a man whose declaration of intention is indicated opposite his name on the list to give an affidavit. The law says that when a man applies to vote whose name is not on the registry list he shall make an affidavit. The man whose name is on the list with "D. I." opposite is not in that class of voters who must make an affidavit in order to vote. He is on the list.

Now, then, what does it mean? The assessor shall put on the list the names of men who have filed their declaration of intention to become citizens and who intend to carry out that declaration before the next election. That is all that these letters mean. If a man comes up to the booth to vote and his name is on the list with "D. I." opposite, and he produces his naturalization certificate and shows the election officers that he has fulfilled his intention, upon that naturalization paper he can vote and no affidavit is required. Now, I do not see any lawyer from Pennsylvania denying this.

Mr. PALMER. I think the gentleman is right about that. We are like you—when we see that a thing is right, we admit it.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Speak louder.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman says that the proposition is true; that if a man has "D. I." opposite his name and goes up to vote, if he has in the meanwhile become naturalized and produces his naturalization papers, then he does not have to make an affidavit. Yet the majority of this committee have found that the election officers were guilty of fraud because they allowed men with those letters opposite their names to vote. They call particular attention to the number at each of the three precincts thrown out, and infer fraud. If you want to accept that sort of an inference, you can do it. This action of the election officers, instead of being fraudulent, was legal.

Mr. WEBB. But does not the majority report state the reverse of your proposition?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; they say that election officers were guilty of fraud in not taking affidavits from men whose names appeared on the registry list with "D. I." against them. I have just shown that such action of the officers was not only not fraudulent, it was legal.

Mr. WEBB. They state that he must have been sworn even though his name was on the registry book.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, that disposes of all the ground upon which the Second Ward of Winton is thrown out. Let me repeat briefly. The election officers' names do not appear on the record, and we do not know whether they are Democrats or Republicans. We do not know anything they did except from the returns. Nobody has testified that they did anything improper, and this fraud is found by the majority of the committee by inferences from these records which I have commented upon in your presence. Now, if you see fit to find as matter of fact that these election officers, whose names are not identified, whose politics you do not know, about whom nobody has said one word, violated their oaths of office, then you can do it.

The testimony as to all three of the precincts is practically the same. I would be glad, if time permitted, to take up every statement of the majority separately and discuss it, but I can not. After they have thrown out three precincts entirely the contestee still has 8 plurality. If all the alleged illegal votes at these three precints were deducted from contestee, it would leave him a comfortable majority.

Mr. WEEMS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is a fact that if the committee had undertaken to purge the vote by deducting from the contestee's vote the maximum claim made by the contestant himself before the committee as to the number of illegal votes, then which of these two men would be elected?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not quite understand.

Mr. WEEMS. Suppose the committee had thrown out in these three precincts all the illegal votes——

Mr. JOHNSON. And had deducted them from the contestee's vote, had deducted every vote that the contestant alleged was illegal, then the contestee would still be elected to this House.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman does not mean that, does he? There were 2,002 illegal votes, and the gentleman doesn't mean that if all those had been deducted from the contestee's vote he would still be elected?

Mr. JOHNSON. I say that if you take all of the illegal votes that the contestant claims in these three precincts and deduct them from the contestee he would still be elected. Now, gentlemen, I want to say——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. One moment. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is important to know whether the other side concedes that fact.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, not at all.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Do you concede it?

Mr. PALMER. Not for a second.

Mr. DRISCOLL. No; we do not concede it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The report does not discuss that in detail.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman stood up as though he did concede it.

Mr. PALMER. Does standing up concede anything?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman's words indicated it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I must hurry on.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Suppose the question in controversy in the three wards was as to whom certain votes were cast for and if deducted from the contestee's vote would still leave him elected, and suppose if those votes were added to the contestant's vote the result would be changed, then you would have an element of doubt. What would the gentleman say to that situation? If it is true that the votes in doubt are uncertain as to whom they were thrown for, so that you don't know whether they all ought to be taken from the contestee or whether or not they all ought to be added to the contestant, there is an element of doubt and of uncertainty. What does the gentleman say to that condition?

Mr. JOHNSON. I know of no law for adding illegal votes to anyone's vote.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Suppose there are 100 votes thrown as to which there is a doubt for whom they are thrown, and you don't know whether they are thrown for the contestee or the contestant, so that by deducting from the contestee you might not reach the correct result, because the truth might show that they should have been added to the other man.

Mr. JOHNSON. If a man is an illegal voter and put a ballot in the box for Howell, there is no reason why it should be added to Connell.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If you deduct from the contestee you might not reach the right result.

Mr. JOHNSON. I don't think you would. I think you ought to apportion the votes among them, according to their respective legal vote.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But that is an arbitrary rule.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Let me suggest that if they are not illegal votes they ought not to be deducted from anyone, and if they are illegal they ought not to be counted for anybody.

Mr. JOHNSON. After throwing out these three precincts upon the kind of testimony I have tried to explain, they find by evidence aliunde that 32 votes were cast for the contestant. I am not going to comment on that testimony, but I hope every lawyer in this House will read it. That is the strongest argument that I can make against it, asking you to read it; and if you want to believe it, then in God's name accept it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But we can not read it. It is too much.

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, no; there is only one witness. I am not asking you to read all the evidence in the record, but we have set out in the minority report every single word of testimony to show upon what the majority find that contestant received 32 legal votes. They prove 29 of the 32 by one witness, so that you would not have to read but one man's testimony, and it is in the minority report.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman mean that the majority claim there were 200 votes that should be deducted?

Mr. PALMER. Oh, that is another thing.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is another thing, and I am coming to that now. The majority, after throwing out these three precincts and giving Mr. Howell nothing there, give the contestant 32 votes there, and 29 of those votes are found to have been cast for the contestant by one man's testimony.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is, in the three precincts.

Mr. WEBB. Does the gentleman mean to say that the majority finds and holds that these three precincts were so tainted with fraud that they are cast aside entirely?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. And yet go back over these same three precincts which they have thrown out for fraud and pick out 32 votes and count them for the contestant?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; that is what they have done. Now, a good deal has been heard about affidavits here to-day. The laws of Pennsylvania provide that if a man goes to the polls to vote and his name is not on the registry list he can not vote unless he makes an affidavit to certain facts prescribed by law. Those affidavits are printed. They are furnished to the election managers, printed forms, with blanks to be filled out. It happened that in this election there were 420 of these affidavits upon which men swore in their votes defective, and because they were defective some of these blanks were not filled out. The votes that were cast upon defective affidavits were illegal.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I will yield the gentleman ten minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON. The majority of the committee find, because of these blanks, that 418 of those men cast illegal votes. Listen.

Suppose there was an election law in Pennsylvania providing that if the poll clerk should spell anybody's name wrong the vote of that man should be declared illegal and deducted from the vote of the candidate for whom it had been cast. Suppose, further, that in holding an election in a Congressional district the poll clerks accidentally spelled wrong the names of 418 men, and you were called upon as a judge in your district to decide the question how those 418 men voted, do you not think it would paralyze the conscience of any man to come before your court and claim that every one of the 418 men whose names the poll clerks had misspelled voted for the same candidate? Those alleged illegal votes came from 94 different precincts in that Congressional district, and contestant claims that every one of these accidental illegal votes were cast for contestee.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; but I hope the gentleman will remember that I have only ten minutes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman mean to say that we found any such thing as that?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not said that you did.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then what are you talking about?

Mr. JOHNSON. The contestant claimed that every one of those 418 votes was cast for the contestee, and he brought some sort of testimony for the purpose of establishing that conclusion. He had 6,500 witnesses. I have no doubt that they could have sworn the horns off a billy goat. [Laughter.] Some of them were evidently willing to do it. He found men who could undertake to saddle every one of the 418 illegal votes on the contestee. If I had five minutes more, I would like to show the kind of testimony by which that contention was sought to be supported. A fellow was furnished a list of names of men who had voted and whose affidavits were illegal.

He went out over the district, into one precinct and another—half a dozen or a dozen of them—and then he came back and testified that from the best investigation that he could make this or that man was a Democrat and voted for Howell. That is the kind of evidence upon which they want you to say that all these illegal votes were cast for contestee.

Four hundred and eighteen men to whom no moral turpitude is attached, their votes being pronounced illegal by reason of the merest accident of an official failing to fill out a blank in an affidavit, are all alleged to have voted for one candidate. The defective affidavits came from ninety-four election precincts, some of which were carried by contestant and others by contestee. Don't you know that those illegal votes were cast for the two candidates just about in the same proportion as they received legal votes?

By Mr. Holgate:

Q. You have, then, either personal knowledge or you have made inquiry as to the politics or the persons for whom these parties voted, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And satisfied yourself?—A. Yes, sir; perfectly.

Q. That is, as to all of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been employed, have you, in gathering information in regard to the politics of these men whose names appeared in these affidavits; as to how they voted, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you inquired in the second district of the Second Ward of Carbondale as to the affidavits filed in this case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make inquiry in relation to William Healey?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you ascertain in reference to his politics?

Mr. BAYLOR. Counsel for the contestee objects to the question as incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant, and not the proper way to prove the politics of a voter.

By Mr. Holgate:

Q. What did you ascertain with reference to his politics?—A. Democrat.

Q. What did you ascertain with reference to the politics of Edward J. Healey, of the same ward and district?

Mr. BAYLOR. Counsel for the contestee object to the question as incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant, and not the proper way to prove the politics of a voter.

The WITNESS. Democrat.

By Mr. Holgate:

Q. What did you ascertain with reference to the politics of Henry Herbert, of the same ward and district?

Mr. BAYLOR. Counsel for the contestee object to the question as incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant, and not the proper way to prove the politics of a voter.

The WITNESS. Democrat.

This one witness's testimony covers several pages just like the above. There are pages and pages of the same sort of evidence all through the record. I give below a sample of the cross-examination of this witness, on page 1210. He is swift enough in giving his conclusions. He said, himself, that he had satisfied himself perfectly. What did it take to satisfy him? On the cross-examination he refused to answer every question that tended to bring out what facts he knew to base his conclusions on.

By Mr. Baylor:

Q. Now, you know William Haley, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have said he was a Democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any talk with him on election day?—A. I refuse to answer.

Q. Did he have any talk since with you about how he voted and whom he voted for?—A. I refuse to answer.

Q. E. J. Haley?—A. Democrat.

Q. Did you have any talk with him as to how he voted, or for whom he voted, or whom he supported on election day?

Mr. HOLGATE. The question is objected to as not cross-examination, and incompetent?

The WITNESS. I refuse to answer.

By Mr. Baylor:

Q. Were you there when he voted that day?

Mr. HOLGATE. We make the same objection, that it is not cross-examination.

The WITNESS. I refuse to answer.

By Mr. Baylor:

Q. Did you challenge his vote?

Mr. HOLGATE (to the witness). You need not answer as to anything that happened on election day.

The WITNESS. I refuse to answer.

By Mr. Baylor:

Q. Henry Herbert, in the Second district of the Second Ward, did you have any conversation with him on election day?—A. I refuse to answer.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him since as to how he voted, or for whom he voted on that day?—A. I refuse to answer the question.

Q. Were you there when he voted that day?—A. I refuse to answer.

Q. Did you challenge his vote?—A. I refuse to answer.

Q. P. E. Timlin?—A. Democrat.

Q. Did you see him and have any conversation with him as to how he voted or for whom he voted on that day?—A. I refuse to answer.

Mr. HOLGATE. You may say that you decline to answer these questions on the advice of counsel.

By Mr. Baylor:

Q. Joseph Colbert?—A. You have not got that right.

Mr. HOLGATE. I desire to enter another general objection to the whole of this cross-examination, and ask that it be stricken out for the reason that it is incompetent, and not cross-examination of any matter inquired of in chief.

By Mr. Baylor:

Q. Joseph Colbert; did you see him around the polls on election day?—A. I refuse to answer the question on advice of counsel.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him there that day?—A. I refuse to answer the question on advice of counsel.

Q. Now, did you have any conversation with him since as to how he voted for the office of Congressman at the last election?—A. I refuse to answer the question on advice of counsel.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him that day as to how he voted?—A. I refuse to answer on advice of counsel.

Q. Were you there when he voted?—A. I refuse to answer on advice of counsel.

Q. And did you challenge his vote?—A. I refuse to answer on advice of counsel.

Q. Thomas S. Roche; did you have a talk with him there on election day?—A. I refuse to answer the question on advice of counsel.

Q. Did you see him there that day?—A. I refuse to answer the question on advice of counsel.

Q. Have you had any conversation with him since as to how he voted?—A. I refuse to answer the question on advice of counsel.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him that day as to how he voted or for whom?—A. I refuse to answer the question on advice of counsel.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman say the committee found that 200 of those 418 men voted for Howell?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, you did.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is a mistake. We found simply that 200 out of 2,001 illegal votes were cast for Mr. Howell. That is our finding in our report; that is the finding as stated in my remarks. Two hundred out of 2,001—a very modest finding on the evidence.

Mr. JOHNSON. Gentlemen, it is worse than I thought it was. Here they say that there is evidence that there were 2,000 illegal votes cast in the district. They say that they find as a matter of fact that 200 of these votes were cast for Mr. Howell, and they deduct that many from his vote. They find as a matter of fact that only one such vote was cast for the contestant.

Now, gentlemen, I will tell you the law on that subject, if you want to decide this question as lawyers and judges.

Mr. GILBERT. What is the testimony as to how many of those illegal votes were cast for Mr. Howell and how many for Mr. Connell?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have just told you. Out of 2,001 votes they claim that 200 were voted for contestee, and this is the way the proceedings were conducted: A fellow went out into the district—into a dozen precincts we will say; he came back and swore that he had investigated the matter, and from the best investigation he had been able to give the particular voters that he named were Democrats or were men who had voted for Mr. Howell. That is the testimony.

Mr. YOUNG. Is it not true that Mr. Connell had the Democratic nomination also—was running on the straight Democratic ticket?

Mr. JOHNSON. If I have the time, I suppose I may as well tell how that matter stands. They undertake to charge against Mr. Howell illegal votes upon no other testimony than the bare statement of a particular man that the voter was a Democrat. The record shows that the Democratic convention in Pennsylvania split; one faction nominated the contestant and the other faction nominated the contestee.

Did you know that? They had a lawsuit down at Harrisburg, Pa., to determine which was the legal Democratic nominee, and the contestant was the plaintiff in that suit, who went into court as a plaintiff to have his name placed on the Democratic official ticket. The court decided that neither had been regularly certified to the secretary of state. The consequence was that nobody ran on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Connell ran on the Republican ticket and on the ballot-reform ticket, whatever that may mean. Mr. Howell ran on the antimachine ticket, whatever that may mean. Now, in view of the fact that the Democrats were divided, a Connell faction and a Howell faction, how are you going to stand here as lawyers and tell me that because a man testified that another was a Democrat, therefore he voted for Howell? You ought to go further and show that he was a Howell Democrat, or what brand of Democracy he belonged to. You know, unfortunately, we have got several brands. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, let me finish the legal proposition I wanted to submit. They say that something like 2,000 illegal votes were cast in that district. Why didn't they sift the thing to the bottom and find out how they were cast; and in the absence of testimony showing for which man they were cast, why didn't they take them off both of the candidates according to their legal votes in the respective districts?

This illustration is used in the minority report: Suppose that a man was elected to Congress by a majority of 1 vote; and suppose there was a contest over the election and the contestant demanded that the votes should be recounted. Suppose that you open the ballot boxes and proceed to count the votes, and when you have counted 3 boxes out of 162 you find a mistake in favor of the contestant of 2 votes, and thereby put him 1 vote ahead of the contestee. Would you stop then and there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAIN. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON. Would you stop then and there in the counting of those votes and seat the contestant? Do you think that would be fair? Do you think that would be judicial? You are not counting the votes for his special benefit, you are counting them to find out the truth. Well, now, here are certain alleged illegal votes. The committee find that enough of them voted for Howell, when they subtract that number from his votes, to elect the other man. Why do they not go through with the whole thing, sift those illegal votes, find out from the testimony, if they can, for whom they were cast? If the testimony shows for whom they were cast, take them from that man. If the evidence fails to show for whom they were cast, then divide them among the candidates under the rules of law.

Now, gentlemen, I have not said one-tenth of what I ought to say.

Mr. GILBERT. What would have been the result if you had thrown out the whole precinct?

Mr. JOHNSON. If we divided them among the candidates, of course the contestee would have been elected.

Mr. GILBERT. I mean the whole vote of that precinct.

Mr. JOHNSON. There were 94 precincts, and the Lord knows what the result would have been. I do not. In some of them the contestant beat the contestee three to one. In some of them the contestee beat the contestant three to one, but their vote was about equal in all those precincts where these alleged illegal votes were cast, barring the three precincts that they have thrown out.

Mr. GILBERT. I understand the precedents of the House to be that when there is so much fraud that you can not separate the legal from the illegal votes, sometimes the House has thrown out the whole precinct and sometimes it has undertaken to eliminate the fraudulent from the legal votes.

Mr. JOHNSON. When the House acts judicially, it endeavors to purge the ballot box of illegal votes. Whenever it acts in a partisan way, it throws out the precinct.

Mr. GILBERT. What I want to get at is, under the proof, can you eliminate the fraudulent votes from the legal votes?

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no trouble in the world about it. Every man whose vote is alleged to be illegal is published, and the evidence upon which they expect to prove that his vote is illegal is referred to.

Mr. GILBERT. And the party affiliations?

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, gentlemen, I have no personal feeling and no political feeling in this case. I want the House to do what is right, and that is all. There were a great many things in the record that a man might have referred to, but I preferred to make an honest legal argument. Do you know why the contestee was elected? That election took place in a district where 80 per cent of the voters were miners.

Mr. YOUNG. And on a strike.

Mr. JOHNSON. It took place just after the greatest strike in modern times. You know something of the feeling that existed. The testimony shows that the contestant was a coal operator. The men who elected the Congressman from that district were coal miners. Are you surprised at the way they cast their votes? If you want to throw out three precincts because of fraud, if you want to say that election officers have been guilty of fraud because they allowed men to vote who are unknown to their own employers, whose names no Member of this House can either spell or pronounce, who frequently and generally have an American name and a foreign name, who may be registered in their foreign name and the poll clerk wrote down their American name, all in the absence of the list the officers were provided with, to do it.

I have no more idea how those names are pronounced than my 4-year-old boy. Possibly if we knew how the name is pronounced we could look at the poll list and find the name as the clerk spelled it. Now, take this case, consider it on incompetent, hearsay evidence, if you will; find fraud on such insufficient testimony, if you want to; throw out precincts and seat a man that the people did not elect, and unseat the man they did elect. Do that if you want to; it is nothing to me. But if you do, do not stand upon this floor hereafter and tell us how much you admire the virtue and intelligence of the laboring men of this country. Do not go back to your districts and exhaust all the adjectives in the dictionary to find beautiful words to tell the laboring men how you love them, but just go to your laboring men and say: "We kicked the man out of Congress that your fellow-laborers elected up in the Tenth district of Pennsylvania." [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, there were a few quotations of law and a few extracts from the testimony that I intended to read to the House, but for lack of time I did not do that. I would like to have the permission of the House to incorporate them in my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the same privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks the same privilege. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BIRDSALL. Mr. Speaker, the questions involved in this case should be determined upon principles of equity and good conscience uninfluenced by political considerations or any consideration whatever save to do equal and exact justice between the parties. We have in the pending case a printed record of nearly 4,000 pages, a record encumbered by much testimony of an incompetent character, out of all which it has been a laborious task for the committee to whom the duty was assigned to sift the chaff and ascertain the truth. Realizing that it is impossible for every Member of this House to go through the record, and that many must rely upon the integrity as well as the judgment of the individual members of the committee, any statement made should bear the imprint of truth and be verified by the record. I have endeavored to give this case a careful examination and judicial consideration, and have joined in the report of the majority not only because I believe it will receive the support of this House, but because it meets my conscientious approbation and approval. Upon the intelligent voter and the purity of the ballot rests the security of government. A republic without intelligence, and that of a high order, is a paradox and an impossibility. Under our system, with the elective franchise so freely extended, the constantly menacing danger is the ballot in the hands of ignorance, supplemented by fraud and corruption at the ballot box. It behooves us, therefore, to put the stamp of our disapproval upon every act which tends to debauch the elector or defile the election.

A careful review of the election laws of the State of Pennsylvania and the decisions of its courts thereunder serve to show that, by reason of its complex population engaged in operating its mines and embraced within the many populous cities which it contains, strenuous efforts have been made to protect the citizen in his right to vote and the State against frauds at the ballot box. Yet this case illustrates how weak and impotent are the laws enacted in the face of careless action or designing fraud upon the part of the officers chosen to execute them.

To fully understand and justly weigh the merits of this case it is important to understand the election laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The organic law, or constitution, fixes the following qualifications for suffrage:

ARTICLE VIII, SECTION 1, CONSTITUTION 1874.

Every male citizen 21 years of age possessing the following qualifications shall be entitled to vote at all elections:

First. He shall have been a citizen of the United States at least one month.

Second. He shall have resided in the State one year (or, if having previously been a qualified voter or native-born citizen of the State, he shall have removed therefrom and returned six months) immediately preceding the election.

Third. He shall have resided in the election district where he shall offer to vote at least two months immediately preceding the election.

Fourth. If 22 years of age, or upwards, he shall have paid, within two years, a State or county tax, which shall have been assessed at least two months and paid at least one month before the election.

ARTICLE VIII, SECTION 7, CONSTITUTION 1874.

All laws regulating the holding of elections by the citizens or for the registration of electors shall be uniform throughout the State.

Article VIII, section 4, of the constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, of 1874, provided that every ballot should be numbered in the order in which it was received, and the numbers recorded by the election officers on the list of voters opposite the name of the elector who presented the ballot. It also provided that any elector might write his name upon the ticket or cause the same to be written thereon and attested by a citizen of the district.

This last provision of the constitution was stricken out in 1901 by an amendment to the constitution as follows:

AMENDMENT.

Strike out section 4 of Article VIII and insert in place thereof as follows: "SEC. 4. All elections by the citizens shall be by ballot or by such other method as shall be provided by law: Provided, That secrecy in voting be preserved."

The election laws of the State of Pennsylvania, act of May 29, 1891, provided that for the purpose of making the original annual assessment and registration of voters in each of the election districts of this Commonwealth it shall be the duty of each of the assessors who are required to perform any of the duties incident to the holding of elections and the registration of voters in the different election districts of this Commonwealth to visit in person each and every dwelling house in his district on the first Monday in May and the first Monday in December of each year, or as soon thereafter as may be possible and practicable, and to make a list, in a book prepared for that purpose by the county commissioners, of all qualified electors that he shall find upon careful and diligent inquiry to be bona fide residents of his district.

By the act of May 16, 1895, it is made the duty of the assessor to make a copy of said original list, and on or prior to the fourth Monday of May and on or prior to the second Monday in December in each year to place a copy on the door of or on the house where the election of the respective district is required to be held and retain the original list in his possession for the inspection, free of charge, of any person resident in the said election district who shall desire to see the same, and it is also made the duty of said assessor to assess from time to time, on the personal application of anyone claiming the right to vote, the name of such claimant, and mark opposite the name "C. V.," and immediately assess him, noting, as in all other cases, his occupation, residence, the date of his assessment, whether a boarder or housekeeper; if a boarder, with whom he boards, and whether naturalized or designing to be, marking in all cases opposite the name the letter "N.," "D.," or "I. N.," as the case may be.

By section 3 of the act of May 16, 1895, it is further provided that after the assessments have been completed, and on the sixty-first day before the third Tuesday of February and on the sixty-first day before the Tuesday next following the first Monday of November of each year, the assessor shall, on the following day, make a return to the county commissioners of the "original registry list" thus revised and completed and two exact copies thereof, and the county commissioners shall thereupon proceed to make out a complete list in alphabetical order of all persons so returned as taxables in said election district and to furnish the same, together with the necessary election blanks, to the officers of the election district on or before 7 o'clock in the morning of election; and no man shall be permitted to vote at the election on that day whose name is not on said list unless he shall make proof of his right to vote as hereinbefore required.

The qualifications required to be shown and the steps necessary to be taken by those who are not on the register list are contained in section 10 of the act of January 30, 1874, and are as follows:

On the day of election any person whose name shall not appear on the registry of voters, and who claims the right to vote at said election, shall produce at least one qualified voter of the district as a witness to the residence of the claimant in the district in which he claims to be a voter, for the period of at least two months immediately preceding said election, which witness shall be sworn or affirmed, and subscribe a written or partly written and partly printed affidavit to the facts stated by him, which affidavit shall define clearly where the residence is of the person so claiming to be a voter; and, in addition, the person so claiming the right to vote shall also take and subscribe a written or partly written and partly printed affidavit, stating, to the best of his knowledge and belief, when and where he was born; that he has been a citizen of the United States one month, and of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; that he has resided in the Commonwealth one year, or if formerly a qualified elector or a native-born citizen thereof, and has removed therefrom and returned; that he has resided therein six months next preceding said election; that he has resided in the district in which he claims to be a voter for a period at least two months immediately preceding said election; that he has not moved in the district for the purpose of voting therein; that he has, if 22 years of age, or upwards, paid a State or county tax within two years, which was assessed at least two months, and paid at least one month before the election; the said affidavit shall also state when and where the tax claimed to be paid by the affiant was assessed, and when, and where, and to whom paid; and the tax receipt therefor shall be produced for examination, unless he shall state in his affidavit that it has been lost or destroyed, or that he never received any.

These affidavits, under the same section, must be preserved by the election board, and at the close of the election inclosed with the list of voters, tally list, and other papers required by law to be filed by the return judge with the prothonotary, and shall remain on file therewith, in the prothonotary's office, subject to examination as other election papers are.

It will be observed that under the act of May 28, 1891, and the act of May 16, 1895, the registry lists are completed by the assessors and delivered to the county commissioners on the sixty-first day preceding election. These are denominated the "Original registry lists," and the county commissioners thereupon proceed to make out in alphabetical order a complete list of all persons returned as taxables in said election districts and furnish the same on or before 7 o'clock in the morning of election to the election officers, and it is expressly declared that no man shall be permitted to vote at the election on that day whose name is not on said lists unless he shall make proof of his right to vote as hereinbefore required.

Prior to July, 1897, a local statute of the Commonwealth of the State of Pennsylvania provided that in the county of Lackawanna collection of taxes might be made by any collector by leaving the amount or a statement thereof with the employer of a citizen, and such employer could deduct the same from the wages due such person, and it constituted a good payment of the tax for all purposes.

On July 15, 1897, the following act was passed:

PAYMENT OF TAX.

SECTION 1. That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to pay or cause to be paid any occupation or poll tax assessed against any elector, except on written and signed order of such elector authorizing such payments to be made, which written and signed order must be presented at least thirty days prior to the date at which such elector desires to vote.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any officer, clerk, or other person authorized to collect taxes and receipt therefor, to receive payment of or receipt for any occupation or poll tax, assessed for State or county purposes, from any person other than the elector, except upon his written and signed order authorizing such payments to be made.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to vote or attempt to vote at any election upon a tax receipt obtained in violation of this act.

This act, it will be seen, provides that it shall be unlawful for any officer to receive payment of or receipt for any occupation or poll tax assessed for State or county purposes from any person other than the elector except upon his written or signed order authorizing such payments to be made, and further provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to vote or attempt to vote upon a tax receipt obtained in violation of this act.

Before entering upon their duties, the election officers, inspectors, and judges are required to take an oath which provides, in substance, that they will not receive any ticket or vote from any person other than such as they firmly believe to be, according to the provisions of the Constitution and the laws of the Commonwealth, entitled to vote at such election without requiring such evidence of the right to vote as is directed by law; that they will use their best endeavors to prevent any fraud, deceit, or abuse in carrying on the same by citizens qualified to vote, or others, and in all things truly, impartially, and faithfully perform their duties respecting the same to the best of their judgment and abilities.

By section 16 of the act of June 10, 1893, of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the county commissioners provide for each election district at every election therein two copies of the assessor's lists of voters, one copy to be called the "Ballot check list," for the inspectors in charge of the ballots, and the other copy to be called the "Voting check list," to be used in marking the names of those who have voted.

By section 19 of the same act it is provided that no persons other than the election officers and voters admitted as hereinafter provided shall be permitted within the guard rail, except peace officers by authority of the said election officers for the purpose of keeping order and enforcing the law.

Section 21 of the same act prescribes the manner in which the vote takes place, and is quite material in the consideration of this case. It is as follows:

SEC. 21. Any person desiring to vote shall give his name and residence to one of the election officers in charge of the ballot, who shall thereupon announce the same in a loud and distinct tone of voice, and if such name is found upon the ballot check list by the inspector or clerks in charge thereof, he shall likewise repeat the said name, and the voters shall be allowed to enter the space inclosed by the guard rail, unless his right to vote is challenged. No person whose name is not on the said list or whose right to vote shall be challenged by a qualified citizen, shall be admitted within the said guard rail until he has established his right to a vote in the manner now provided by law, and his name, if not on the check lists, shall then be added to both lists.

By section 23 of the same act it is provided that no voter, not an election officer, shall be allowed to reenter the inclosed space after he has once left it, except to give help as hereinafter described. Each voter's name shall be checked on the voting check list by the officer having charge thereof as soon as he has cast his vote in the manner now provided by law. The same section also provides that each political party shall be allowed to appoint three electors to act as watchers in each voting place, one of whom shall be allowed to remain in the room outside of the inclosed space. The same section also provides that until the polls are closed no person shall be allowed in the room outside of the inclosed space except these watchers, voters not exceeding ten at any one time who are waiting their turn to prepare their ballots, and peace officers when necessary for the preservation of the peace.

Under the constitutional provisions above set forth no person above 22 years of age can vote unless he shall have paid, within two years, a State or county tax, which shall have been assessed at least two months and paid at least one month before election.

By the act of May 16, 1895, provisions are made for the registry of his name upon proof of his qualifications as a citizen and taxpayer, and when so entered upon the list he is prima facie entitled to vote, and the voting list made thereform, in the absence of a challenge, is conclusive upon the election officers of his right so to do. In the absence of his name upon the voting list he is required by the same act to make proof of his right to vote, and such statute expressly provides that no man shall be permitted to vote unless such proof is made. To establish his right to vote independent of the voting list, if his name does not appear thereon, he is required by the act of January 30, 1874, above set out, to produce at least one qualified voter in the district as a witness to his residence in the district in which he claims to be a voter for the period of at least two months immediately preceding said election, which witness is required to be sworn or affirmed and subscribe to a written or partly written and partly printed affidavit to the facts stated by him, and which affidavit must clearly define where the residence is of the person so claiming to be a voter. In addition, the person claiming to be a voter shall also make and subscribe to a written or partly written and partly printed affidavit stating, among other things, where he was born, etc.

These provisions of the statute of Pennsylvania are mandatory, and have been so held by the supreme court of the State of Pennsylvania. In McDonough's case (105 Pennsylvania Statutes) it was held that—

> The vote of an elector not upon the registered list can not be received without the form of the proof required by the act. Such vote is illegal when tendered, and can not be shown to be a legal one on the subsequent investigations into the election of the person returned, and this construction in no way infringes the constitutional rights of the voter.
> The object of the affidavit is to prevent fraudulent voting, and for this purpose it furnishes the foundation for indictment for perjury, if false. The affidavit must therefore be sufficiently specific to show upon its face, without reference to any other fact or circumstance, that the voter has the right which he claims, and must be sufficiently specific to found thereon an indictment for perjury, if the allegations were willfully false.

This construction is affirmed and expressly approved by the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Cusick's case, reported in 136 Pennsylvania Statutes, 459, which case also holds that the affidavit must be specific as to residence, taxes, and citizenship, and that a general affidavit averring the qualifications in the language of the Constitution is insufficient.

An examination of the evidence shows that at least 350 of the affidavits filed by persons required to make proof of their right to vote independent of the registry list were defective, but the evidence to my mind only satisfactorily shows that 11 of the persons so voting voted for the contestee, George Howell. Likewise, an examination of the evidence discloses that many persons who voted were disqualified for the nonpayment of taxes, but the evidence as for whom the ballots were cast is unsatisfactory in many cases, under the strict rules adopted by the committee for the determination of that question. In many cases, however, the evidence is clear and satisfactory.

The election returns for the first district of Old Forge, second and third precincts of Winton borough are, in my judgment, rightly rejected.

It is not the policy of the law to throw too many obstacles in the way of investigating the correctness and bona fides of election returns. The true policy to maintain and perpetuate the vote by the ballot is found in jealously guarding its purity, in placing no fine-drawn metaphysical obstructions in the way of testing election returns charged as false and fraudulent, and insuring to the people by a jealous, vigilant, and determined investigation of election frauds that there is a saving spirit in the public tribunals charged with such investigation, ready to do them justice if their suffrages have been tampered with by fraud or misapprehended through error, and it is in the spirit of this rule that questions respecting evidence in contested-election cases should be solved. (Reed v. Kneass, 2 Pars. 584, Bright's Election Cases, 366.)

While a mere irregularity which does not affect the result will not vitiate the returns, yet when the provisions of the law have been entirely disregarded by the officers and their conduct has been such as to render their returns utterly unworthy of credit, the return must be rejected. In such case the return proves nothing. (McCrary on Elections, sec. 511; Bright's Election Cases, 493; McKenzie v. Buxton, Forty-second Congress; Smith v. Shelly, 2 Ells., 18; Lowe v. Wheeler, 2 Ells., 61; Finley v. Walls, Smith, 367.)

It does not follow that the legal voter is thereby disfranchised, as his vote may be proved by evidence aliende, and when so proved may be counted. (See cases above cited.)

The general rule is that when the return is set aside both parties must prove their vote by other evidence, the court proceeding without reference to what appears upon the face of the returns. (McCrary on Elections, sec. 505, fourth edition.)

Returns may be impeached by evidence of persons that they voted for a particular person at the polls to show that more votes were cast for him than were counted and by evidence that unauthorized persons participated in the election or count. They are also impeached when fraud is shown in the reception of illegal votes and the poll can not be purged or when the evidence for any reason discloses that they can not be safely relied upon. (Reed v. Kneass, 2 Pars., 584; Bright's Election Cases, 366; Reed v. Julian, 2 Bart., 822; Bell v. Snyder Smith, 247; McCrary on Elections, sec. 491, 4th edition.)

Tested by these rules and principles in the light of the evidence in this case, the conclusion seems inevitable that the returns from this district should be rejected as unworthy of credit. We have seen how the voting list furnished the judges of elections is carefully prepared by the county commissioners.

The composition of the board of elections will also be noted. Two judges and two inspectors are supposed to stand guard and protect the purity of the election. On the Saturday or Monday preceding election two copies of the assessor's lists of voters are delivered to the judges of elections, one copy, called the "ballot check list," for the inspectors in charge of the ballot; the other copy, called the "voting check list," to be used in marking the names of those who have voted. Any person desiring to vote must give his name and residence to one of the election officers in charge of the ballots, who must thereupon announce the same in a loud and distinct tone of voice; and if such name is found upon the ballot check list by inspectors in charge thereof, he shall likewise repeat said name and the voter shall be allowed to enter the space inclosed by the guard rail, unless his right to vote is challenged. No person whose name is not on said list or whose right to vote is challenged shall be admitted within the guard rail until he has established his right to vote. Until the polls are closed no person is allowed in the room outside of the closed space, excepting the watchers, voters not exceeding ten at any one time who are waiting their turn to prepare their ballots, and peace officers when necessary for the preservation of the peace.

I desire also in this connection to call particular attention to section 33 of the act of June 10, 1893, which act, after defining the duties of the election officers and the particular manner in which the election shall be carried on, provides:

> Any public officer, upon whom the duty is imposed by this act, who shall negligently or willfully fail to perform such duties, or who shall negligently perform it in such a way as to hinder the objects of this act, or who shall negligently or willfully violate any of the provisions thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be sentenced to be fined not exceeding $1,000, or to undergo imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

It will be observed that vigilant care is enjoined as a positive duty and a negligent performance, though not willful, of such duty is punishable under the statute. The purpose of the act would fail if it were otherwise. Negligence in the performance of public duty is not ordinarily a crime, but it becomes such in reality when frauds are thereby permitted upon the elective franchise; hence to enforce the duty strictly upon the election officers negligence in the performance of such duty is equally condemned with a willful violation. I assume that the term "negligence" as used in this statute means a failure to exercise that degree of care in the observance of the requirements of the law as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise under like or similar conditions and circumstances.

I desire especially to call the attention of the House to some of the testimony bearing upon the conduct of the election officers in the districts in question and to the manner in which such elections were conducted:

Dominick Russ, on page 974 of the record, testified in substance as follows: That he lived in Clark street, in the Third Ward of Winton; that he was born in Italy; that he has no citizen's paper, and never had any; that he was a laborer in the Dolph mines; that at about 1 or 2 o'clock in the afternoon of November 4, 1902, one John Elly came to his house and asked him if he could vote him. He told him he had no paper and had no right to vote, and Elly replied that that made no difference; that Elly then took him over to the saloon, where they had a glass of beer, and then to the polls: that he took him into the election room, past the officers; that he knew each one of the election officers personally, but could not tell their names; that Elly went into the booth with him and marked his ballot; that he did not know how he voted: that he went and voted because Elly asked him to go and told him he could vote even if he was not a citizen; that he made no affidavit and signed no paper that day.

The testimony of these witnesses, of which many like cases can be found in the record, served to show the gross carelessness and negligent manner in which the election was conducted by the officers in charge. In this connection, also, I wish to call attention to that portion of the statute of Pennsylvania requiring that the ballot boxes containing the ballots, after they are counted and deposited therein, shall be securely locked, taped, and sealed, with the names of the judges written thereon in such manner that no one can tamper with the boxes without leaving evidence thereof; that the boxes when so sealed must be deposited with the nearest justice of the peace, and upon this point James Conroy, one of the judges, testifies, on page 1095 of the record, that there were no strips of tape put over the boxes in his election district; that there were no seals in any way; that the boxes were simply locked. This testimony is also confirmed by the testimony of P. W. Stokes, one of the commissioners, who was afterwards appointed to collect and impound the ballots by the United States district judge of Pennsylvania (found on p. 1135 of the record). He testifies that the ballot boxes in the wards in controversy were not locked and sealed as required in the statute.

The manner in which the election was conducted in the Third Ward of Winton Borough is also shown by the testimony of James Conry, found on pages 1091, 1092, 1093, 1094, and 1095 of the record. He testifies, on page 1095, that no affidavits were made or filed with the election board that day; on page 1093, that but one challenge was made; that he saw Italians going in and coming out, but that when the overseers would not pay any attention to it he did not.

In considering the manner in which the election was conducted the statutes relating to the right of assistance should also be noted. It provides that if any voter declares to the election officers that by reason of any disability he desires assistance in the preparation of his ballot he shall be permitted by the judge of the election to select a qualified voter in the election district to aid him in the preparation of his ballot, such preparation being made in a voting compartment. The purpose of this law is clearly apparent, namely, to enable the honest voter, whom from physical disability, or otherwise, needs assistance to secure it in preparing his ballot. He must so declare his need to the election officers. It should not be made the means whereby unscrupulous men are permitted to enter the booth and see that the purchased vote is rightly delivered.

The testimony hereinbefore quoted shows that illegal voters, without any declaration whatever to the judges, were accompanied by adherents of contestee into the voting booths, and in truth did the voting for the foreigner who was indifferent as for whom he voted.

In the face of the positive injunctions of the law as to the care in the exercise of their duty, how, in the light of this testimony, can we conclude that an honest election was held? How could the election officers on this record defend themselves from the charge of negligently performing their duties; and if they can not, it is folly to urge that conduct which subjects them to the penalty of the law does not amount to such fraud as will vitiate their returns?

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BIRDSALL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THAYER. I want to ask the gentleman, who has just quoted from the Pennsylvania statute, if you find that it directs that when a person finds that he is not on the register list and makes affidavit of his right to vote, the law directs that the officer shall place those affidavits with the voting list and return them to the county seat—wherever they go? Is not that simply directory; and if the officers should fail to do that, should you then permit the voter an opportunity to vote, and after voting, deprive him of his vote?

Mr. BIRDSALL. This provision, I will say in reply to the gentleman, has been held by the supreme court of Pennsylvania to be absolutely mandatory. There is no escape from the conclusion of the authorities which I cite.

The evidence, to my mind, establishes such gross negligence and a willful violation of the law as to render their acts and returns unworthy of belief in any tribunal worthy to investigate them. It is difficult, indeed, to find a single provision of the law that was not violated in some one of the districts in question. A few of these violations may be noted, as clearly shown by the evidence already alluded to and elsewhere found in the record, namely:

The reception of known illegal votes;
The appointment of a disqualified inspector;
The denial of the right of assistance;
The permission to accompany voters to the booths and mark their ballots when no assistance was demanded;
The acceptance of votes from nonregistered persons who made no affidavits;
The reception of votes on defective affidavits;
The presence of peace officers in the voting places;
The rejection of Republican watchers;
The failure to seal the ballot boxes as required by law;
The failure to deposit them as required by law; and
The electioneering of one of the inspectors.

If such gross violations of the law as are shown in this case are permitted to stand and meet with our approval, then we may as well desist in all efforts to enact laws for the protection of the ballot. No man can with honesty be the beneficiary of such frauds. Let us set a higher standard for the conduct of election officers and keep as pure as possible the fountain of authority in this Government.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. As I understand it, the committee relied on both propositions?

Mr. BIRDSALL. The committee relied on all these points, and I desire to say that the gentleman who preceded me is entirely mistaken in saying that the majority of the committee rely on the character of the testimony that he refers to, and which is set out in the minority report in determining the fact that an illegal vote was cast. A stronger rule was adopted by the majority of the committee than met with my approval. I think there is sufficient evidence in this record to establish the fact that between 1,500 and 1,600 of these illegal votes were cast for Mr. Howell. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BIRDSALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WADE].

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker, of course what I shall have to say in the brief time that has been allotted to me must be very general in its character. No lawyer can examine the record in this case without feeling the utter helplessness of grasping the situation that is presented there in that district, the consideration of which is before this House. In the record here we have the testimony of some 7,000 witnesses and briefs and arguments of several hundred pages. It is not necessary for me to say that I make no pretense of having read all of the evidence in this case, but I have read sufficient of the evidence in this case to convince me that from the time that this contestee, this young lawyer, just starting out in life, became an aspirant for this office that he has been subjected to a series of outrages which are seldom equaled in electoral contests in this country.

He was subjected to an outrage when the nomination which he sought was stolen from him; he was subjected to an outrage in the character of campaign which he had to meet; and if perchance the report of the majority of this committee should be sustained by the gentlemen of this House, I say that that would be a grave imposition upon his legal rights and upon the rights of the people who elected him to this office.

Now, at the outset, to make a few general observations, it is all right to set up an ideal condition which we would like to see exist at every polling place, but this can not be realized, for we all know that there is scarcely a precinct in the United States in which illegal votes are not cast at every election.

Election laws are strict. They should be strict, and in the weakness of humanity and the absence of information upon these laws mistakes will occur and in the heat of campaigns wrongs will be done by the overzealous friends of candidates, so we must not try to measure up to the ideal of a condition which would be desirable if it were practicable. Now, I do not see what there is to be expected here in the nature of partisan feeling. I have not been in this House long enough, perhaps, to understand these things. I realize that times come when a party upon whom the responsibility for enacting legislation rests is short of a good working majority. I realize that those times come and that in such times partisan action takes the place of judicial determination.

It has occurred in Democratic Congresses and in Republican Congresses; but in this House, with the majority which the other side now possesses, I can not for a moment consider that this question shall be determined upon any partisan basis. And then, Mr. Speaker, when we turn to the platform upon which Mr. Connell was nominated in the alleged Democratic convention, we find little, it seems to me, to appeal to the gentlemen upon the other side of this House. I am going to read portions of this platform.

> We recognize the necessity of cleansing our Commonwealth from the stain that has come upon her by the unparalleled corruption of the boss rule of QUAY and his subservient, dishonest tools, and denounce the corrupt methods by which this rule debauches the legislature and dominates every department of State affairs for the purpose of securing "plums" for himself and retainers, in total disregard of the interests of the honest people of this State. * * *
> We congratulate the Democratic party in Lackawanna County upon the splendid victory achieved in the election of the ticket in 1901, and pledge our untiring efforts to elect the ticket this day nominated, and for this purpose we ask the cooperation of all fair-minded citizens in the county of Lackawanna.

I know if a Republican in my State should ever accept a nomination upon a platform of that kind he would soon be put out of circulation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another thing we should take into consideration in this matter, and that is the result of this election. This man—Mr. Howell—was forced to go upon a ticket of his own because of the difficulties originating in this alleged Democratic convention, the details of which can not be gone into in this short time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was not Connell subject to the same embarrassment?

Mr. WADE. No; he had the Republican nomination also.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But before that convention he had that embarrassment.

Mr. WADE. Of course Connell was nominated by this "rump" convention, as it was called, but this is the result: At that election every Democrat upon the ticket was elected, the governor receiving in that district some 5,000 majority, and the other gentleman upon the same ticket with Mr. Howell, I believe the judge of the orphans' court, received a majority of some sixteen hundred votes, and those figures throw a vast flood of light upon the proposition I want to submit to this House. I am not going to go through the testimony in detail or attempt to discuss the problems with which the members of the committee are necessarily more familiar than I am; but I am going to present a proposition here which appeals to me as a lawyer as establishing not only that Mr. Howell is not illegally elected, but that many of the votes, hundreds of the votes, thousands of the votes, received by Mr. Connell were illegal votes.

Now, let us look at this thing. What is the report of this committee? The report of this committee is that there are three precincts which have been thrown out. There is not any lawyer who can justify that result, and I have not time to refer to the authorities; there is not any lawyer who can justify that action until it reaches a point where you can not find a respectable number of legal votes in a precinct, and this has been repeatedly held by this House in Congressional contests. The next thing that was done was to take 32 of these votes from these precincts which had been eliminated and give them to the contestant.

I do not deny the legal proposition that where you throw out precincts the contestant may by competent proof establish the fact that there were legal votes there to which he is entitled; but I say there is no lawyer who can read the testimony upon this point from which this committee extracts 32 votes or squeezes 32 votes—I say there is no lawyer who can read it and agree with the proposition. I want to submit to you lawyers and you business men what you think of this sort of evidence:

James T. Flynn, sworn.
Q. Do you know Mike Hignay?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Whom did he support last fall?—A. Mr. Connell.
Q. And John F. Loftus, you are acquainted with him?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Whom did he support?—A. Connell.
Q. John R. Evans?—A. Yes, sir; he was postmaster; he was a Connell man; he is dead.
Q. John Grosh?—A. I don't know him.

I will not go further because that offers a fair sample of much of the evidence in this case to show the fact that certain illegal votes were cast for Howell. Is there any lawyer here that would contemplate for a moment that sort of evidence as being admissible in a court of justice from a justice of the peace to the Supreme Court? But they have not only taken these 32 votes, for that leaves only a margin of 8 to work upon, which they knew could not be sustained under that evidence. There were in that district 2,002 illegal votes cast.

Mr. DRISCOLL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WADE. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Has the gentleman read the evidence?

Mr. WADE. I stated at the beginning that I had not read all the evidence.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Has the gentleman read our report?

Mr. WADE. Yes; I have it in my hand.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman know how the vote would stand if all three districts were thrown out?

Mr. WADE. As I understand the report, Connell would have a plurality of 8.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Connell would have 24.

Mr. WADE. Now; let me ask if the gentleman from New York has read all the evidence?

Mr. DRISCOLL. No, I do not claim that I have. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] But I have read some of it.

Mr. WADE. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I shall be very glad if any gentleman will call my attention to any misstatement, because I am liable to be mistaken in regard to these figures. I want to adhere to the facts as presented by the report.

Now, there were 2,002 illegal votes cast in this district. What is the situation? We have a contest here in which one man has 24 majority and a vote of which there are 2,002 illegal votes cast. What happens in a case of that kind? Legally, what is the rule? Why, the general rule is in courts that these illegal ballots shall be taken from each side proportionately. Isn't that right? But in bodies that have the power to order a new election this rule is not followed. Where it affects the result of the whole election it is declared void, and the parties are subjected to a new election. Is not that the rule? I will refer, as an authority for that proposition, to the contested-election case in 1 Ellsworth, pages 93 and 94, and also to McCrary on Elections, section 496. McCrary says:

This is probably the safest rule that can be adopted in a court of justice, where there is no power to order a new election and where great injury would result from declaring the office vacant, but it is manifest that it may sometimes work a great hardship, inasmuch as the truth might be, if it could be shown, that all the illegal votes were on one side, while it is scarcely to be presumed that they would ever be divided between the candidates in exact proportion to their whole vote. But the rule which, in the absence of proof as to how illegal votes were cast, would deduct them all from the majority candidate is much more unreasonable and dangerous. Of the two evils the least should be chosen. We see here, however, how important it is that it should, if possible, be made to appear, either by direct or circumstantial evidence, for whom each illegal vote was cast.

In a legislative body having power to order a new election, and in any other tribunal having the same power, it will doubtless generally be regarded as safer and more conducive to the ends of justice to order such new election than to reach a result by the application of the rule above stated.

This rule is sustained by the action of this House. But now I am passing beyond that proposition. I say that the most that could be done would be to declare the seat vacant. But it ought not to be declared vacant, because here are over 1,800 illegal votes, and they say there is no evidence for whom they were cast. I want to show you from the record in this case that there are sufficient facts and circumstances to indicate to any reasonable man that they were cast for Connell. I want to say it in as brief a way as I can. We lawyers understand that fraud is hard to prove. It must be proven by facts and circumstances, and sometimes the facts and circumstances must be very slight.

You will find here at the beginning of the first volume of the evidence—and it is about the same all the way through—a sample of what I want to call the attention of the gentleman to. After this contest was commenced—there were six or seven thousand witnesses to be examined—the contestant goes out there and, as I am informed and the record shows, starts in to take testimony in three or four places, inquiring into the validity of these votes. Now, let us see the nature and character of this testimony. I read from the first page of the first volume of the evidence of William R. Davis. He was asked where he lived, etc., and says he is a single man; and is asked how long he lived in Lackawanna County, and says he lived there twenty-two years. He is asked if he paid any taxes, and he said, "No;" and therefore he was disqualified from voting:

Q. Did you vote at the last election, held on the 4th day of November, 1902?—A. No, sir.
Q. You are positive about that?—A. Yes.

Then, coming down to the next witness:

Q. Have you any tax receipts?—A. I have, but lost them.
Q. Did you vote at the last election?—A. I did; yes, sir.

Just as soon as the witness said that he voted at the last election—and that is pursued here through hundreds of pages—the counsel examining the witness stops and does not pursue his legal right to ask that witness for whom he voted.

Now, we all know that in the ordinary course of events this did not disqualify this witness from objecting to the question on any ground except that it might incriminate him—a privilege which he might waive—and every lawyer knows that if contestant did not feel there was danger in asking him who he voted for, he would do so. Nay, more, if he were not convinced that the answer would be that he voted for his client, the lawyer would have asked him. But it even goes further than that. I have examined page after page and witness after witness, and they are all of the same character all the way through. In every witness's testimony, as soon as that question was answered, as though he were examined by a diagram and a square and compass, the examination is chopped right off.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. WADE. Now I will make the point without further examining the testimony. There is in this record, following it further, instance after instance where counsel for Mr. Howell asks the witness for whom he voted and where counsel for Mr. Connell objected to the question, and not only objected, but told the witness that he did not have to answer the question. Not only that, but told the commissioner that he must tell the witness not to answer. Not only that, but the commissioner undertakes to rule upon evidence and tell the witness not to answer. What does that indicate?

Why, it indicates—the rule which is well recognized in these cases and in all cases—that where a man seeks to suppress the evidence, where a man destroys a paper, where a man refuses to call to the stand and examine a witness who is within his reach, the presumption obtains that that witness, if examined, or that question, if asked, would be against him. That rule is applied in every court of the United States, and I wish to close now by showing that it has been applied by this House in the I Ellsworth, at page 122, in election contest of Finley v. Bisbee.

Contestee shows by proof that 74 foreign-born persons voted without complying with section 8, Article IV, of the Constitution. Fifty-three of these testify themselves that they voted for contestant, four others that they voted the whole Democratic ticket. Seventeen others are called and testify that they voted without producing the necessary certificates. They were asked by contestee for whom they voted for Congress, and were told by the contestant's counsel they were not required by law to disclose that fact, and thereupon they refused to answer for whom they voted. We are of opinion, their votes being illegal, they were bound to answer, and refusing to do so at the suggestion of contestant's counsel is very strong presumptive evidence that they voted for contestant.

So in a case reported in Mobley before this House—a contested-election case—the same rule is laid down.

Gentlemen, if you will examine fifty pages of this evidence and observe the guarded care with which the contestant avoids opening the door for the admission of the fact as to whom these illegal votes were cast for, you will reach a state of mind which would force you, if you were upon the bench deciding the question, to say that the presumption is that these men voted for this man, because otherwise they would have been asked how they voted or the evidence would have been permitted to be introduced when an answer was sought to that question. Yet there are now more than 1,800 of those witnesses summoned by the contestant who are in that situation. Eighteen hundred illegal votes; yet the counsel who examined those witnesses did not dare to ask them the question!

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state the date of that decision that he has just been quoting—the decision of the court of Pennsylvania?

Mr. WADE. It is not from a Pennsylvania court, but is a report of a committee of this House on a contested-election case.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Then I will ask the gentleman whether he is aware that an act of 1895, known as the "ballot law of Pennsylvania," prohibits the voter from disclosing how he voted and makes it an indictable crime for him to do so?

Mr. WADE. But it has not been held——

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman whether he is aware of that act of 1895, in force when that election was held, making it a crime for the voter to disclose for whom he voted?

Mr. JOHNSON. That applies to a legal voter; not to an illegal voter.

Mr. WADE. I could read from authorities, if I had the time——

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. My question was as to whether the gentleman knew of the statute of Pennsylvania to which I referred.

Mr. WADE. I know there is some such statute of the State of Pennsylvania, but there is not any statute, to my knowledge, which prevents an inquiry from a man who has shown he is not a legal voter, but is a violator of the law.

Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the fairness and the justice of the gentlemen upon the other side in behalf of this young man who has been forced into this unequal contest. Did time permit I would like to discuss these questions further, but I have said enough. It seems to me to indicate that the claims of the contestant are based upon illegal votes, and that it would be rank injustice to seat him as a Member of this House.

Did time permit I would like to go into the evidence showing the manner in which Connell secured his votes, and it is a chapter in the evidence which should condemn the course of this contestant before this House or before any other tribunal.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOUTELL). The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WADE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. STERLING] thirty minutes.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this discussion ought to be confined to the questions that are made in this record. The remarks made by the gentleman from Iowa have not been based to any extent upon the record that was before this committee and is now before this House. I can not understand what the platform which the gentleman read has to do with the question that this House has to decide.

In this great mass of testimony there are but two questions of importance—but two questions that need be considered by any Member who is called to vote on the issues that are here made. This discussion ought not to go beyond those questions, because what is said outside of the record simply misleads instead of giving information of the real issues.

One question, and the important one, it seems to me, in this case—the one that practically determines whether the contestant or the contestee is entitled to this seat—is involved in the testimony contained in the record with reference to the First and Second wards of Winton borough and the first district of Old Forge. In those three precincts the contestee received a majority of the votes as they were returned—a majority of 453. It is charged by the contestant that these returns are so tainted with fraud, that the misconduct of the officers of those precincts was so reckless and so lawless, that these returns should be thrown out, and the entire vote, unless there be votes proven aliunde for one of the parties or the other, should be rejected.

The law of Pennsylvania under which these officers acted—the statute taken in connection with the construction of the statute by the highest court in that Commonwealth—is to the effect that these officers shall take an oath—and these officers did take an oath—that they would not receive and would not consent that any other person should receive any ballot except from a person who under the constitution and the statutes was entitled to vote at that election; that is to say, the officers of that election said on their oath that they knew the law of Pennsylvania and that they would obey the law.

And we have a right to assume that they knew it, and gentlemen can not say on the floor of this House that these men might have been mistaken; that they might have misconstrued the law; that perhaps they did not know their duty. They said on their oaths that they did know their duty under the law, and they were bound under the law to perform it.

The statute of Pennsylvania says that no man shall be entitled to vote at any election in that State unless his name is on the list of registration or unless he makes an affidavit proving his qualifications as a voter. And it is no hardship. The man whose name is on the list of registration is bound to make the same proof, and if a voter neglects to get his name on the list of registration is it a hardship on him to require of him, when he presents himself at the voting place, the same proof as was required of every man whose name was put upon the list of registration?

Did they do this? I say that this record shows that in the Second Ward of Winton there were 80 ballots cast at that election by men whose names were not upon the list of registration. In the Third Ward of Winton there were eighty-three names—eighty-three persons who cast ballots at that election whose names were not upon the list of registration. At the first district of Old Forge, out of a vote of 418, there were 158 men who voted whose names were not on the list of registration, and in not one of these precincts—where over 800 ballots were cast, where more than 300 persons voted whose names were not on the list of registration—was there a single voter who made an affidavit that he was a qualified voter at that election. Now, how is it possible for these officers of election to say they did not know the law when they swore that they would consent to receive no ballot except that of a voter who was qualified under the constitution and the laws of the State to cast his vote at that election? They had the registration list before them.

The law said that when a man presented himself at the polling place and offered to vote the officers of election should refer to the list of registration and see if his name was on that list, and if it was not on that list they must refuse to accept his ballot. Then, if he cared to make an affidavit, if he cared to prove that he was a legal voter, he could make an affidavit, and then vote. Yet these officers in more than 300 instances, in almost one-half of all the votes that were cast at those polling places, failed to perform their sworn duty under the statutes and the constitution of the State.

In the Second Ward of Winton more than one-third of the men who voted were not on the list of registration and did not make an affidavit. In the Second Ward of Winton almost one-half of the voters were not on the list of registration. In the first district of Old Forge more than one-third of all the votes that were cast were cast by men whose names were not on the list of registration, and not a single affidavit was filed. Why, what evidence is necessary? Is it necessary to prove that these men knew the law, when they said on their oaths that they knew it and that they would follow it? They say, "Why did not the contestant produce these officials of election on the witness stand to testify whether or not they violated the law?"

I say to you, gentlemen representing the contestee in this case, why did you not produce them in court? Why did you not bring them into court and prove by them that they did follow the law? We could not compel them to testify if, as we say or as the contestant says, they violated the law; but if, as you say, they followed the law, you could have compelled them to testify. So I say to you that it is too late in this proceeding—the time has gone by when you can say that the officers of this election were not called. The record, which was the best evidence in any court and the best evidence in any committee, showed for itself that these names were not on the list of registration, that they made no affidavits, and this record shows that these men did vote.

Now, if this ballot is tainted, if there are a large number of illegal votes, what should be done? The gentleman from South Carolina said the law is that this ballot must be purged. He said that the law required that the illegal votes be sifted out, so as not to deprive any lawful voter of the right to cast his ballot. Well, that is the law; and the courts say and committees have said that where a ballot is so tainted with fraud that it is impossible to find out the truth, to discover who voted legally and who voted illegally, then the entire poll must be thrown out. But whose duty is it, in case the legal votes can be determined, in case it may be discovered who voted rightfully and who voted wrongfully—whose duty is it to purge the ballot and give to the citizen that voted rightfully and under the law his right of franchise? It is a serious proposition, but the law does not impose upon this House or this committee that heard this case the burden of purging the ballot.

When the contestant alleges the ballot is tainted with fraud, and when he has proven his allegation as set forth in his notice of contest in this case, then he can rest, if he cares to, and the burden shifts, where? The burden shifts to the contestant to prove the votes that were cast legally for him and to the contestee to prove the legal votes that were cast for him.

Now, we are not in the dark on this proposition. We have abundance of law as to the question where the burden of proof rests in that case. I want to read some citations which I have gathered here on this question, which seem to me to entirely answer the controversy made by the gentlemen representing the contestee as to whether or not this ballot could have been purged, and whose duty it was to purge it.

In the contested-election case of Washburn v. Vorhees, reported in 2 Bartlett, page 590, is the following:

> If fraud is clearly shown to exist to such an extent as to satisfy the mind that the return does not show the truth, and no evidence is furnished by either party to the contest from which the truth may be deduced, then no alternative is left but to reject such returns.

The record is made in this case. These parties, both of them, have had their day to take their testimony. The statute of Pennsylvania prescribes that the contestant shall have forty days to put in his testimouy and the contestee shall have forty days to put in his testimony, and I say to you that the record is that the contestee in this case devoted but eleven of his forty days to the taking of testimony. He had abundance of time; he had the power of the law right there in that district where the election was held. He had commissioners provided by the statutes of the United States before whom this testimony could be had, before whom it could be taken; and if he wanted to purge the poll and prove for himself, for his benefit, the legal votes cast for him in these three precincts, then I say he was bound to do it, and he can not complain now. He is estopped from coming before this House or the committee that has heard this case and arguing the ballots ought to be purged. Again, in the case of Finley v. Wall, reported in Smith, page 389, it is said:

> Where returns are cast out for fraud, the party claiming under the election—

And the contestee in this case is claiming a majority of 453 in these precincts in this election—

> The party claiming under the election must prove the actual vote in some way.

Again, it is said in Clayton v. Breckinridge, reported in Rowell, page 691:

When returns are impeached, they can not be received for any purpose, but only those votes proved aliunde can be counted. Each party can only be credited with such votes at the box in question as he may show by other evidence.

Again, in another case, this language is used:

When returns are shown to be false, the respective parties are thrown back on such evidence as it may be in their power to produce to show for whom votes were cast. Votes thus proved must be counted; those not proven must be disregarded.

The books are full of decisions along that line. Any suggestion that may come from any gentleman speaking for the contestee to the effect that the committee should have prorated the illegal votes between the contestee and the contestant according to the total number of the votes that each received, or the proposition that all these illegal votes should have been counted against the contestee in this case, is purely a fiction. I say there is no law anywhere, at least so far as I have been able to find, that authorizes any such proceeding in disposing of the illegal votes. Now, I submit to any gentleman here, Why ought we to charge up all these illegal votes against the contestee? We do not know whether all of them were cast for the contestee or not. Why should we charge any of them against the contestant? We do not know whether any of them were cast for him or not, except as the record shows by aliunde proof. But suppose there were no other fact. Suppose that there were frauds and a number of illegal votes were proven. What right have you to charge an illegal vote against any man or against either of them unless the record discloses for whom the illegal vote was cast?

You can not do it. It is purely a fiction, and it is an arbitrary proposition that has no foundation in the law and no foundation in reason. The law, so far as I have been able to find—and I think it is the law everywhere in this country—is that where a ballot is tainted with fraud, where it is corrupt, where misconduct and illegality on the part of officers of the election show that illegal votes were cast, it is the duty of the tribunal passing upon that contested case to cast out the entire ballot and say to the parties, as the law says to them: Now, if you care to, you can prove for yourself, you can prove for your own benefit, any illegal votes which were cast for you.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You mean any lawful votes.

Mr. STERLING. I mean any lawful votes that were cast for you. Now, the contestant did undertake to prove by aliunde evidence some legal votes cast for him. There is considerable testimony in this case here by the contestant to the fact that a large number of persons in these precincts, voting legally, had cast their ballots for him, and the committee determined that there were at least 32 of them proven to the satisfaction of the committee. Did the contestee avail himself of the privilege under that provision of law? Did he call a single witness to prove his legal votes in those precincts? If he did not, and the record shows that he did not, then I say that it is too late; he is estopped now from complaining of the fact that the ballot was not purged entirely.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was any request made to give him opportunity to do that?

Mr. STERLING. By himself?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes, or on his part.

Mr. KENNEDY. He had forty days and only used thirty-one hours for taking testimony.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did not make any effort?

Mr. LANNING. May I interrupt to ask the question as to what evidence there is in the case to support——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what is going on over there——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is, by what kind of evidence the 32 votes were supported?

Mr. STERLING. I will consider that now.

Mr. KENNEDY. The testimony in some cases was the testimony of the man who marked the ballot of the legal voter.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we would like to know what is going on on that side of the House; nobody can hear except two or three on that side.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken and gentlemen interrogating the speaker will kindly address the Chair.

Mr. STERLING. The question arises what kind of testimony is competent to prove how a vote was cast. Where the ballot is secret, the ballot does not disclose the fact. What is the next best evidence? The party who casts the vote, and in that regard I desire to call attention particularly to the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa, that in the pages of this record it appears that when the contestee had asked witnesses as to how they had voted the contestant interposed an objection and stated and instructed the witness that he need not answer. We are not complaining of that. The gentleman representing the contestee is complaining of the character of the evidence, and I desire to call his attention now to the testimony of the very witness from which he read, Mr. Flynn, who testified that some of these persons who voted legally in these precincts had voted for Mr. Connell, and that same witness was asked by the attorney for the contestant for whom he voted, what his politics were, and the contestee objected and instructed that witness that he need not answer.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So the objections were mutual?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir. Both the contestee and contestant seem to have tried this case on the theory that a voter was not permitted and could not be required to testify as to how he voted, and the pages of this record are full of objections made by counsel for contestee when contestant sought to prove by a witness as to how he voted. I say the record is full of objections and instructions from their mouths to the witnesses to the effect that they were not required to——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Make that statement.

Mr. STERLING (continuing). Make that statement as to how they voted. So he is estopped now from complaining that the evidence in this case as to how these men voted did not come from the mouths of the voters themselves. He told these witnesses that they need not disclose that fact, and witness after witness took advantage of the instruction and this information as to what their rights were under the law and refused to tell under the instructions of counsel for the contestee as to how he voted.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it not a fact that the record shows that the contestee's counsel, wherever the question was asked how the witness voted, said to the witness that he need not answer the question; that it was his privilege to refuse?

Mr. STERLING. That is what I have said the record shows.

Mr. JOHNSON. And is it not a fact that the contestant's counsel instructed the witness not to answer? In other words, he did not stop by telling him it was his right to keep secret how he voted, but he told him not to tell.

Mr. STERLING. That is not the record. I do not pretend to say what the counsel for the contestant or the counsel for the contestee said in each instance all through this record, but I say that the objections and reasons for the objections and the instructions to the witnesses and the reasons they gave for giving the witnesses instructions were substantially the same on both sides through all the pages of this record. This is the point I desire to make: You having tried this case on the theory that the voters themselves could not be required to disclose how they voted, you can not complain now that that kind of evidence is not before this committee and before this House. The Lord knows that we would have been glad to have had it; but you have placed yourselves in that position, and why now should you complain?

Now, in reply to the question of the gentleman, I want to call your attention to the testimony of the witness read by the gentleman from Iowa. It is convenient here now to call attention to the position taken by the counsel for the contestee on that very question by this very witness. I am quoting from the testimony of Flynn. The counsel for the contestant asked what was his politics—that is, the witness's politics. He asked, "Do you know James Flynn?" That is the witness himself. He said, "Yes." He was asked, "What is your politics?" The witness answers, "Mine?" And the question is, "Yes; yours." Mr. Ballentine, attorney for the contestee, says, "You don't have to answer that question if you don't want to." I am reading on page 26 of the views of the minority, a little above the middle of the page. That is the witness that the gentleman from Iowa read from on that same page.

The gentleman from Iowa also said this is the character of his testimony, and he read as follows: "Patrick J. Walsh; do you know him?" "Yes." "Was he supporting Connell?" "Yes." Now, that is not all the evidence of James Flynn. The evidence farther down on the same page, on cross-examination of Flynn, is, "Are you attempting to tell whom these men voted for?" And the witness says, "Yes; the men told me so."

Now, the question is whether or not the declaration made by the voters themselves is competent to prove how they voted. If the ballot does not disclose the facts, if the witness himself is not allowed to testify, where are you going for proof as to how this or that man voted in any election? Is it impossible to purge the ballot for the reason that these two classes of evidence are barred under the law? The next best evidence, and the only evidence that is left for any party in a case of this kind, is to prove what? Why, to prove what the voter said, prove his declarations, prove what political party he belongs to.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG. When the witness from his own testimony has shown that he was not a legal voter, does not his privilege of secrecy cease, he being no longer a voter?

Mr. KENNEDY. He has the privilege of not being compelled to furnish evidence to convict himself.

Mr. STERLING. There is one reason why a legal voter is not bound to disclose how he voted, and that is the fact that it is a secret ballot, and the law expressly says that he does not have to tell that fact. But when the man is an illegal voter there are two reasons why he does not have to tell how he cast his ballot. The first one is that the law provides that no man, whether an illegal or a legal voter, has to tell how he voted, and the other one is, being an illegal voter, having committed a crime, he does not have to testify for the reason that he does not have to criminate himself.

Permit me to read from some very well-considered cases the rule as to the admissibility of declarations of the voter as to how he voted. In Vallandigham v. Campbell (1 Bartlett, 231) the Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar in an opinion says:

> The American cases have, indeed, been mainly directed to the question of receiving the declarations of voters. As to the latter, and besides several prior cases, the point was expressly and deliberately decided in the great New Jersey case in 1840, usually known as the Broad Seal case, and the evidence was unanimously received and a number of votes determined upon it. This precedent has been generally approved ever since, and the undersigned attach more importance to it than usual, because it was unanimous in a highly partisan case, and because of the great ability and distinction of the gentlemen who composed the committee. The same rule of evidence as to the declarations of voters, both as to qualifications and vote, was deliberately adopted by the legislature of Maryland in 1819, as also in the legislature of other States and courts having special jurisdiction to try contested elections.
> As to a number of voters whose declarations are given in evidence, it appears upon the papers and testimony that their attendance as witnesses could not be procured. But it is not necessary in such cases to first call the voter and see if he will claim his privilege of refusing to answer. It was not done in any of the cases decided by the British Parliament. It is not necessary in settlement of cases where the declarations of the parishioner may be given in evidence (1 Greenleaf on Evidence, sec. 175), and the Supreme Court of the United States has expressly decided that where a witness can not be compelled to answer he need not be called. (6 Peters' Reports, 352, 367.)

In the case of Delano v. Morgan the committee held as follows:

> As both parties claim that a large number of persons not qualified electors voted at this election, it is necessary to determine what evidence shall be taken to show for which candidate such votes were cast. For whom a vote is given, by the laws of Ohio, is a secret properly known only to the voter himself, and he is never required to disclose it. This fact must therefore often be determined by circumstantial evidence alone.
> To what political party a voter belonged, whose partisan he had been, whose friends claimed for him the right to vote at the time, what he said of his intention before, and his act after voting are circumstances which each claimant has endeavored to prove, and which the committee has considered in making up its verdict. In this action they are governed by precedent as well as principle. The same ruling obtained in the celebrated case from New Jersey, decided in 1840, and known as the "broad seal" case, and also in the Vallandigham v. Campbell, decided in 1858. (See Bartlett's Contested Elections, pp. 28 and 233.) If it is not to be inferred from this kind of evidence for whom an illegal vote was cast, it can not, except in a few instances, be ascertained at all. Any number of illegal votes, once placed in the ballot box, either by the deception or connivance of the board, can never after be excluded unless the whole poll is rejected or the fraudulent voters voluntarily confess their crime. When, therefore, an illegal vote is shown to have been cast, the committee have endeavored to ascertain from circumstantial evidence, when positive proof could not be given, for whom it was cast and deduct it from his count. (Delano v. Morgan, 2 Bartlett, 168.)

Text writers on the law of contested elections have adopted the same rule. Paine says:

> When the secret ballot is used, it is ordinarily more difficult to show for whom an illegal vote was cast than to prove its illegality. Recourse is sometimes had to the unsworn admissions or declarations of the voter himself. In England, where the vote was formerly given viva voce, the declarations of the voters could be received in evidence to set aside the election of a member of Parliament; as also, to diminish the poll, by removing an illegal vote, or to prove bribery of the voters; but they were not admissible on a charge of bribery against a candidate. Upon the authority of the English cases the court of appeals of the State of New York in 1868 said: "In the case at bar the disqualification was proven by the voter himself; but these authorities abundantly sustain the position that the declaration of the voter as to his want of qualification would have been admissible and legal evidence." It is to be observed that the question now under consideration did not arise in the New York case, and yet the dictum of the judge was followed by the supreme court of Wisconsin in a case in which the question did arise. The latter court said: "The objection to this evidence is that it was hearsay. To a certain extent this may be so; but the well-settled and uniform practice is to allow it in contests of this nature."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOUTELL). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. STERLING. On that point let me say further that there is a broad distinction to be made between testimony coming from a witness who has cast a legal ballot and one who has cast an illegal ballot. I say in the case of the man that has cast an illegal ballot it is very questionable whether under the law, if he has cast it illegally, wilfully, whether he can be permitted to testify or not, or whether his evidence is competent, and let me tell you the reason, and there is authority for it in cases which have been before this House time and time again. The illegal voter knows that the election has passed and that his ballot has been impeached, and he knows that if he tells the truth, if he testifies for whom that ballot was cast, then it will be taken away from the man for whom he voted.

But if he testified falsely about it, if he testifies that he voted for the other man, then his illegal ballot will not only be counted for his friend in the contest, but one will be taken away from the other party, thus giving to the illegal voter, if his testimony as to how he has voted is made competent, the power, in effect, to cast two illegal ballots at the same election. This is a strong inducement to the corrupt voter to testify falsely with impunity and without fear of the consequences of perjury for the reason that the actual fact is known only to himself.

Now, there is just one other matter to which I desire to refer, and that is this: There are, according to the admissions of counsel for the contestee in this case, more than 1,000 illegal votes outside of these three precincts. More than 1,100, it is charged by the contestant, voted illegally for the reason that they had not paid their taxes under the statute, as is required, before election, and the counsel for the contestee admitted that there were about 800 of them; and I say that of the 418 votes that were cast on illegal affidavits, counsel for contestee admitted that at least 300 of them were illegal, and thus it is with the 800 illegal ballots in the three wards I have named where they are tainted with fraud; and with more than 1,000 illegal ballots elsewhere in the district, we have more than 1,800 illegal ballots in that district.

Something has been said by the gentleman speaking for the contestee to the effect that there was a presumption in this case that had to be overcome by the contestant, and that that presumption was that the certificate of election imported verity in this case. I say that where the contestee obtained only 461 plurality by the returns, and where the contestant has proceeded and proven beyond question, beyond doubt, that more than 1,800 of the ballots cast are illegal, that presumption is destroyed and overcome, and then there is no further burden on him to overcome a presumption that the election certificate imports a verity. On the contrary, the proof in this case made by the contestant in this regard does not only overcome that presumption, but it proves absolutely and beyond a doubt that this election certificate does not import a verity.

What is a presumption? This is not a conclusive presumption. It is not a presumption that requires proof beyond a reasonable doubt to overcome it. It is a mere naked presumption, which says to the contestant: You must take the first step in this proceeding. The scales are now balanced, and you must proceed by competent evidence to turn the scale, even in the estimation of a hair, and if you have done that, you have made out a prima facie case. It will not do—and I want to impress that fact upon the gentlemen on this side of this Hall—for them to turn to one page and say: "Here is the evidence that shows how John Smith or William Jones voted." This record of 4,000 pages is full of that. Some of it is here with reference to how John Smith voted; some of it is over there, and some of it in another volume. There were 6,500 witnesses called by this contestant to make out his case, and instead of gentlemen complaining, as they do in their minority report, that he exercised too much energy, that he showed too much interest in the matter, he ought to be given credit for doing what he could to bring the facts before this committee and before this House as to the truth which we all seek in the matter.

My time has almost expired, and I desire to say in conclusion that in my judgment we owe it not only to this contestant—for it involves broader rights than the rights of a single individual; it involves the rights of the whole people and of this Congress; it involves the very fountain source of popular government and institutions; and so I say we owe it not only to this contestant but to the whole people that we denounce every act that violates the purity of the ballot and that we nullify every result that flows from such violation. Of all laws the election laws should be the purest in form and the most faithful in enforcement. A poll is sacred only as it expresses the will of the people. There is no sanctity thrown around a poll vitiated by fraud, and there is no sanctity around the poll of these three precincts. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McLAIN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHULL].

Mr. SHULL. Mr. Speaker, I take it that as a part of the history of this case the fact that William Connell received the nomination of the Democratic rump convention as a candidate for Congress is important. While it is true that the courts of Pennsylvania decided that this nomination was irregular, so that he was not allowed to be in the Democratic column as a candidate, it is important in this case, for the reason that the majority of the committee in arriving at their conclusion desire this House to arrive at the same conclusion—namely, that in the rejected election districts the Democrats had a majority of the officers, and if they were derelict in their duty or in any way perpetrated fraud they did it in the interest of the contestee.

I desire to say that the contestee in this case made this fight without any party organization back of him. It is true that he received the nomination of the Democratic convention, but through some irregularity his nomination was rejected by the court and he was relegated to the necessity of taking out a nomination under the head of "Antimachine."

I recite this for the reason that I think it important in the consideration of the subject from that standpoint; and I think it just as important that it should appear as a part of the history of this case that the contestant, for the purpose of electing himself to this body, was willing to ride any horse, so it was a winning one; or perchance he was so enamored of the company of Robert E. Pattison, a man who is better hated by the stalwart Republicans of the State of Pennsylvania than any man living in that State, that he desired to keep company with him.

While the course of my remarks will of necessity be somewhat irregular, I desire to call the attention of the House to several statements that have been made by gentlemen upon the other side; and the first of these is the one relative to illegal voters.

Under the law of Pennsylvania, as construed by its supreme court time and time again, it has been decided that while the ballot in that State is a secret one it is secret for the protection only of the legal voter, and that when a voter is proven to have voted illegally—so proven by his own evidence—he can be compelled to testify for whom he voted, or by other evidence, for he stands incriminated without testifying for whom he voted. If that is good law—if that is the law of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania—then that was the primary evidence to be introduced by the contestant in every instance, preparatory to proving how the man voted. If from some cause perchance the illegal voter could not be reached, then by showing that fact upon the record they would be permitted to introduce secondary evidence, provided the secondary evidence was of a proper character. But in taking this evidence no such course was pursued, nor was it attempted to be pursued.

Before paying some little attention to the majority report I refer to another thing which is a part of the history of this case and appears as a part of the record in the evidence as brought to the House, and that is the conduct of a commission that was appointed to take the testimony in this contest. Under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania—and I presume under the laws of every Commonwealth of this country—a commission appointed by a court is simply a conduit, a medium to bring evidence to the court, the same as a master in chancery. If that is true, if that is good law, then it was the duty of this commission in every instance to take down all that occurred before them; not to rule upon the evidence, not to rule what was competent and what was incompetent. Their proper function was to take down the questions, the objections, if any, of the attorneys, and the answers to the questions; and the ruling on it would be made later by the judicial body.

To the election laws as quoted by the majority I take no exception beyond the fact that the law of 1895 relative to county commissioners and assessors is not properly quoted in their report. It is not the law of 1895, but it is a clause of a law quoted or recited for amendment.

In 1895, after the constitutional amendment doing away with the numbering of the ballots, the necessity of an assessor producing to the county commissioners, in addition to the original entry list, two lists was wiped out. The same is true of the two lists which were required under the older act to be issued by the commissioners and by them given to the election board prior to the opening of the poll. Under the old law when two lists were issued one was styled by the election officers a ballot check list; the other was styled a voters' check list. At the time of the closing of the polls the voters' check list was sealed, with the mutilated ballots, the unused ballots, the affidavits of the election officers, the affidavits, if any, of the voters, the election returns, the tally sheets; and these were forwarded to the prothonotary of the court in any county as the custodian of those papers.

The other list was by the election officers sealed up in the ballot box with the other papers required by law, including the ballots. Why this should be quoted, that there should be two lists, I can not conceive, except for the purpose of misleading the House and misleading this committee into supposing that there were a number of lists, copies of the original registry lists, and therefore making it appear plausible for an ingenious and not overscrupulous attorney to foist upon this committee and upon the House a certified copy of an original entry list that never was and never could have been in the possession of an election officer—for the purpose of what? For the purpose of proving that the election officers had committed fraud through and by an instrument that the law presumes they never saw. The list that went into the hands of the election officers—a copy of the original registry list—was by them sealed up, or presumed to have been sealed up, in the ballot box.

If there were any persons voting whose names were not on the original registry lists as produced to them in alphabetical order, those names would appear at the bottom of their list. If so, then it would become necessary on the part of the election officers to have taken such affidavit as is prescribed by the statutes of the State and return them with the other papers to the prothonotary of the court.

The committee in fairness should have quoted the election law relative to overseers, which permits—

> On petition of five voters of any given district, the appointment by the court of each county of overseers for each district, one from each party. That the said overseers so appointed shall have the qualifications of an election officer; shall be present from the time of opening the poll until the closing thereof; be present at the counting of the ballots, and sign with the election officers the return of the district for which he may be appointed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SHULL. I should like to have five minutes more.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. SHULL. The election law of Pennsylvania requires that the election officers of any given district shall place the alphabetical registry list sent to them by the commissioners, after counting the vote, in the ballot box with the ballots and other papers prescribed by law. Such being the case, it must be evident to any unbiased man that without opening the ballot box in any given election district it would be a physical impossibility to show by documentary evidence whether or not any names of any persons had been added thereto by any election officer unless he be endowed by the Creator with a fluoroscopic eye or a radioactive optic.

With these original registry lists wiped out of existence it must be apparent from what appears on the record itself and the law applicable thereto that the committee is relegated to a decision of this case upon a mass of testimony covering about 500 pages, which, if the most liberal construction of the laws of evidence was applied to it, could be reduced to ten pages. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the ruling of the commission made every particle of the evidence that was taken by them purely ex parte where the right of cross-examination was denied, and therefore that it could not and should not be used in this case if any pretense of law is to apply. This same remark applies to two affidavits that were taken and that are spread on this record, one of which purports to be a certified copy from the prothonotary of Lackawanna County that there are now no affidavits filed in his office with the other election papers of the district of first and second Winton and first Old Forge.

This evidence is practically worthless for the reason that it proves nothing. Those affidavits might not be there to-day, but is this conclusive evidence to prove fraud or irregularity on the part of election officers, in that those affidavits were not filed at the time prescribed by law? If this be accepted as evidence, why anyone in any court would be able to prove or disprove anything.

Further than that, I desire to say that this part of the election law of Pennsylvania is not mandatory. It is simply directory, and the failure of an election officer to comply with this law does not in any way invalidate the election of any given district.

THE THIRD WARD OF WINTON.

The committee in their report state:

> Notwithstanding the plain, unequivocal statement in the statute which provides that no man shall be permitted to vote at the election on that day whose name is not on said registry list unless he shall make proof of his right to vote, as hereinbefore required, and notwithstanding the oaths of said election officers above set forth, they permitted in this ward a large number of men to vote whose names were not on the registry list without affidavits in proof of their right to vote, as required by law.

The only evidence offered that would be admitted by any court of justice in support of any irregularity at this poll is that of Gabrille Kelli, who swears that he did not vote. His name is on the original registry list and is also on the voting list. And Mike Cholish, who swears he did not vote, and his name is on the original registry list and also on the polling list.

The fact developed in these two cases shows clearly that they were instances of personations; in other words, that some other persons voted under the names of each of these two men. While personations might under certain conditions be conclusive evidence of fraud on the part of election officers, yet no one could so infer in an election district composed largely of Slavs, Huns, Lithuanians, and Italians, people of different ethnological stock, of different ideals, and characterized by marked lingual differences, gathered in colonies by themselves, and known to their employers and the natives generally only by number or by names indicative of some personal appearance or characteristic.

No unbiased man would state that the personations practiced on an election board of a district composed of this sort of inhabitants could even by inference be accused of fraud or negligence.

The only other instance which it is attempted by testimony that comes anyway near to the dignity of evidence is that of Tom (John) Sevak, or Tom (John) Seval, or Tom (John) Sowal, who seems to be the same man, assessed under the name of Thomas Sowal, who swears that his name is Sevak, and that he had in this district a brother by the name of George Sevak, who is registered also as George Sowal, indicating simply that there is a difference in the spelling of the name, and nothing more.

John Conry, the only election officer in this district who was sworn, testifies that there were no affidavits of voters taken by the election board of that district for the reason that no one voted who was not on the registry list. The contestant's attorney seems to have impressed upon the majority of the committee that where a person is marked "D. I." and "I. N." on the registry lists in the hands of the election officers that this is notice to the election officers that this man is not a legal voter and must make affidavit before his vote is received. This is positively not the law of Pennsylvania. Under the law of Pennsylvania, if a man who is so marked on the registry list offers to vote, he must present his naturalization paper, and after doing this he is in the same position as any other registered voter without any letters or words following his name.

The contestant calls a witness by the name of Beni Betti, who swears that there was a conspiracy between him and a man by the name of Lawler to vote men who were not legal voters, and that he and Lawler gathered the men, and that a man by the name of John Lally voted them. They also called Lawler to prove the same thing, and he denied the statement of Beni Betti. It is shown that John Lally was a Republican. The contestant did not call Lally to substantiate or deny the statement of the apparently subsidized Beni Betti, so that the contestant proves and disproves his own allegation, and how much credence can be given the uncorroborated evidence of a self-confessed criminal in the face of the majority of the election board being Democratic, the coconspirator a Democrat, and the ballot marker a Republican, and in the presence of a Republican overseer appointed by the court? And how can that in any way indicate that these foreigners were rounded up and corralled by the friends of the contestee, taken in, and voted by the connivance of the election officers? The respective votes of the contestant and the contestee did not vary materially from the proportionate vote cast at the preceding general election. That the election machinery was apparently in the hands of Mr. Howell's friends seems a piece of witticism in that the contestant had back of him the Republican party, the ballot reformers, and a part of the Democratic party, and the contestee no party organization, and the balance of this paragraph only intensifies the humor.

THE SECOND WARD OF WINTON.

The evidence of Wallace Barber and Frank Lavcoski is that they did not vote. Their names are on the polling list and, therefore, are evidence of personations. A professional witness, who swears en bloc to the residence and politics of many persons, swears that Thomas Wright and John Mackey, whose names are on the original registry list and on the voting list, are both dead. If this is true it makes the total personations in this district four, and the character of the voters or electors in this district or ward are the same as in the Third Ward and, therefore, should not be construed as indicating fraud on the part of the election officers. Thomas Moore, Thomas O'Conner, and Richard Hasley swear that they voted. They were not registered and made no affidavit, being the only three witnesses to show ignorance, incompetency, or negligence in the discharge by the election officers of their duty, and I submit whether the casting of this number of illegal votes would warrant the throwing out or rejecting the vote of the whole ward, and thus punish the legal electors of this district for the violation of the election laws by the election officers by the receipt of these votes. Do the precedents of this body warrant so drastic a measure where it is possible to purge and to strike out the illegal or fraudulent votes?

The principle underlying all the decisions of the supreme court of the State of Pennsylvania on contest cases is that the ballot should be purged of illegal or fraudulent votes where it is possible. The disfranchisement of a large body of men who are not only entitled to the elective franchise but who exercise that right in complete conformity of law would be simply monstrous. If this were the rule it would be possible for wicked and designing men to disfranchise thousands of honest voters. Such construction of law will never prevail. The terms of the law must be subordinated to its spirit and purpose.

OLD FORGE, FIRST DISTRICT.

In this district there is no evidence of any violation of the election laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The contestant offers as evidence a certificate of John F. Cummings, a prothonotary of Lackawanna County, a document which would not be received as evidence in any court or before any judicial body for the reason that it is ex parte; further, it is not an affidavit relative to a record, neither is it an affidavit to a file as contemplated by law for the reason that under the election laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania the prothonotaries of the courts of each county are simply the custodians of the election returns of his county. If it were admitted as evidence it proves nothing, for the reason that it simply states what is now in his possession as prothonotary, not what was in his possession at the time the returns from that ward came into his possession.

There is no evidence that anyone voted whose name did not appear on the voting list as returned and the alphabetical registry list that is in the ballot box. Neither is there any evidence of duplicates or substitutions. It is true, however, that persons voted opposite whose name the letters "D. I." and "I. N." appeared on the registry list without filing affidavits, for the reason that the law does not require any affidavit to be filed. The election board in this district sent for one Michael Cafferty to fill a vacancy of inspector. He was not registered. He voted, but there is no evidence that he did not make an affidavit required by law. There is no evidence that any peace officer or any other officer at this election polled with friends of the contestee, or that threats were used.

It is true that a Republican watcher by the name of Karnoski was forcibly ejected, and it is also true that if the election officers, of themselves or by means of peace officers, had not ejected this man they would have been derelict in their duty, for the reason that it was proven that this man was violating the election laws of the State by electioneering for the contestant; the law being that all persons are prohibited from electioneering within any election room or within 60 feet thereof.

It is also true that there was another Republican watcher present at this poll all day, and it is also true that there was also present a Republican overseer, who, under the law, was compelled to remain at that poll from the time of its opening until the vote was counted, the ballot box sealed, and the return countersigned by himself. There is no evidence that the right of challenge was denied one man, one man swearing that he challenged one vote. The judge of the election swears that the vote challenged at that poll was not received.

The only evidence that voters were denied the right to make their own selections of persons to assist them in marking their ballots is that this professional ballot marker, Karnoski, after being ejected for violation of the law, was allowed to mark no more ballots, and there is not a scintilla of evidence that any ballots were marked contrary to the desire or instruction of voters, and I submit whether there is anything relative to the conducting of the election at this poll that would justify the statement that the election in the district was conducted in a high-handed manner and without regard to the provisions of the laws of the State. The contest as presented to the House is a parody on justice—comedy that is about to be elevated to the dignity of a tragedy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire how much time we have consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOUTELL). On the Republican side there have been one hundred and forty minutes used, and on the other side one hundred and twenty-four minutes.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I think I bring to the consideration of this majority resolution for unseating the contestee as open and unbiased a mind as there is in this House; but I should be false to myself and false to my constituents did I not enter my protest against the passage of this majority resolution.

It appears that the contestee was elected by 461 votes in Lackawanna County to a seat in this House from the Tenth district of Pennsylvania. The purpose of this resolution now is to seek to eject him from the House and to reinstate our good friend Mr. Connell, who was defeated by 461 majority at the last election, and this is undertaken on the ground of fraud, practiced by Mr. Howell and his friends.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us go back to the beginning of the campaign and ferret out the fraud, if there is any, participated in by anybody and everybody participating in this election. We can not go over all the evidence, over 4,000 pages, of the finest print we often see, in giving the evidence that was taken in this contested-election case, seven-tenths of it in my opinion having no relevancy to the case whatever. But I would like to set up a few milestones along the route, in order that we can take our bearings and see "where we are at."

It has been claimed that this man should be unseated because of fraud in polling the vote for the contestee. Let us see what parties up in Pennsylvania were most accountable for fraud happening that day. Well, it seems there was a Democratic convention in the county of Lackawanna on the 23d day of September last. From the reports which I have heard of the elections up in Pennsylvania the last few years I had come to believe that there were no Democrats tolerated up there, and I was astonished to learn not only that there are any Democrats up there but that one county is strongly Democratic, and I hope in the time yet to come, and not very far distant, that the little leaven nurtured up in the northwest portion of Pennsylvania may leaven the whole lump.

The Democracy in that sturdy little county met in convention with 192 delegates, and it seems that in some unxeplainable way and by some unspeakable means there were 32 delegates in this convention that had been tarred by the Connell stick. They came into the convention and undertook to run it on the principle that the tail could wag the dog. The scheme didn't work. They were squelched and ousted. The immortal thirty-two, those stalwart patriots who would not stoop to fraud and connivance, withdrew from the convention and set up a rump convention and nominated, as they had been requested to, Mr. Connell, one of the most prominent leaders of the Republican ring in that ring-governed Republican State—an excellent gentleman withal, but a violent Democratic hater from start to finish.

Think of it, Mr. Speaker, these 32 veneered Democrats sneaking into a Democratic convention and failing to capture the convention, then setting up a rump convention, and then nominating the Republican nominee, and he, too, one of the rankest of rank Republicans in that ring-ruled Republican State of Pennsylvania. The other 160 delegates remained in their convention and nominated Mr. Howell. About when, Mr. Speaker, did the fraud business begin up in that district, and who were the conspicuous actors?

It seems that there were some technical irregularities found in the proceedings of these two conventions. It does not appear in this mass of printed evidence, so far as I have followed it, just what the irregularities were; but in some way each of these nominations was thrown out by those who are empowered with authority to make up the ticket. I do not know what sort of Democratic representatives they were who went out. It's a new breed, and we have none of them up our way.

But these bolters and hirelings had succeeded at least in one thing. They had deprived the Democratic voters of Lackawanna County of the right to have the name "Democratic candidate" on their ticket, because, as I understand the law of Pennsylvania, when a party fails for any cause to make a regular nomination in convention, and a candidate is nominated on nomination papers, he is not permitted to take any part of the party name to which he belongs. And so in this case Mr. Howell could not have his name in any way connected with the word "Democrat." It could not be "Independent Democrat," "Citizens Democrat," "Popular Democrat," "Regular Democrat," or in any way whatever connect his name with the word "Democrat."

So Mr. Howell ran under the title "Antimachine," and it was a very appropriate title if he could not run under the name of his own party, for he was running, in spite of all their efforts, against "the machine," which the Connell men had attempted to use against him. So you see, Mr. Speaker, that the Democratic party was met at the very threshold of this campaign by those who deprecate and despise fraud and intrigue.

I do not accuse Mr. Connell of this despicable conduct I have shown, for personally I have a great respect for Mr. Connell, but unfortunately he has to share the obloquy of his scheming political manager. I have sat in this House with Mr. Connell for several years, and our relations have always been the most kindly and pleasant; and I know but little of Mr. Howell; was never introduced to him until this morning. I am standing here contending for what appears most clearly to be the right in this matter; and I would rather be right even than that Mr. Howell should be continued in his seat here.

Now, let us see whether the ballot boxes have been stuffed by Democrats or not. I can not go into all the details of this matter, for I am very much limited in my time, but Mr. Pattison, Democratic candidate for governor, the old war horse of the Democratic party in Pennsylvania, received in Lackawanna County a majority of 5,000 votes. Let me give it exactly, so that there may be no mistake. Robert E. Pattison received 5,625 majority of votes in this identically same Congressional district in which Mr. Howell received a majority of 461.

Mr. George Guthrie received a majority of 3,890 as the Democratic candidate for lieutenant-governor; James Nolan, Democratic candidate for secretary of internal affairs, received a majority of 2,287; M. F. Sando, antimachine candidate for orphans' court judge of Lackawanna County, received 1,837 plurality, while poor Howell received the least of all, only 461 majority. This much-heralded "fraud machine" seems to be much out of gear when it is put in operation to roll up majorities for Mr. Howell. But, my friends, let us see how the good people of Lackawanna County looked upon this much-vaunted "fraud" claim in the election of 1902.

My friends, the judge of probate and secretary of internal affairs, elected at the same time by the Democrats of Lackawanna, have taken their seats and are now serenely holding office, although they received far larger majorities than did Mr. Howell. Nobody has questioned their election. No one has gone howling "Fraud!" through the county. Everybody apparently is perfectly satisfied, probably in large measure because they know that, fortunately or unfortunately, the county is safely Democratic. But for reasons best known, as I believe, to the politics of Pennsylvania, politics of a kind that do not and can not flourish elsewhere on earth, it has seemed necessary and highly essential to put Mr. Connell back in a seat in this body, and it must be done, law or no law, conscience or no conscience.

Now, Mr. Speaker, suppose we go a little further and find out something more about this fraud we have heard so much about. The gang started in first, as I told you, to nominate their Republican candidate through Democratic channels by an attempt to steal and control the regular Democratic convention; and they failed in that, but they did succeed in keeping the name "Democrat" off the Democratic ticket, and compelled Mr. Howell to run without his party's name.

Let us see now about frauds. It seems, in referring to the testimony of one Mr. John Early, taken before the committee, that those in Mr. Connell's interest wanted to influence Mr. Early to take the Democratic vote in his mining district over to Mr. Connell; and while I have not time to read all this choice evidence of these highly moral and fraud-despising managers of Mr. Connell's campaign, let me read some of the choice bits of the conversation that took place between Mr. Early and Mr. Grimes, who, by the way, seems at one time to have been warden in the county jail, and if he is not very careful he will swop places with some of those jail birds he had under his care, and instead of being warden he will be behind the bars himself. Mr. Michael Grimes, once warden of the county jail, came to Mr. Early by appointment, and this is the conversation they had:

"Your name is John Early?" I said, "Yes, sir." He said, "You are president of the Gipsey Grove Local?" I said, "Yes, sir." He said, "You told me you have not decided how you are in politics." I said, "Yes, sir." He said, "We will give you $1,000 in clear money—you don't have to pay a cent yourself for any expenses—to work for William Connell," he says, "and we will also pay your traveling expenses, and you can name every man in Dunmore who will work for William Connell." He says, "Remember this thousand dollars is clear money; all other expenses will be paid," he says. "What do you think of that?" I said, "That's all right." He says, "You can get the money if you come down here;" he says, "This thousand dollars will be paid to you before you undertake to do any work for us whatever; that money will be paid down to you."

I have not time in the few minutes left me to read more. Suffice it to say that the reported evidence in this case shows that one of Mr. Connell's managers sought to bribe Mr. Early, who was an officer in one of the labor organizations, with an offer of $1,000 to work for Mr. Connell's election; but that is not all. They have some Italians over there, squads of them, that nobody knows the names of, and they go by numbers, and it seems that some friend of Mr. Connell came in there and went to a high muck-a-muck in the Italian crowd and offered him $160 if he could get his company to vote for Mr. Connell and work for him. This is the testimony:

Q. Do you mean this $160 was paid to the men who are members of that society—do you know Luigo Marosh well?—A. Yes; about seven years.
Q. Do you live in the same district as he lives?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How many votes were there for Mr. Connell in the club?—A. Luigo Marosh wanted to get all the votes for William Connell.
Q. How many were there who wanted to vote for Mr. Connell?—A. Nobody except that Luigo Marosh.

That is the way this grand old Republican party and its heelers, and so on—I can not stop to read it all—started out to detect fraud. And they come to this House and ask us to find that the officers, made up of Democrats and Republicans, are all a pack of frauds, because they permitted some Poles, Armenians, Italians, and what not to vote when they did not, and nobody else, know their names, or could pronounce them if they did know them. Everywhere they went by numbers rather than by names. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have not time to go into this as I wish, but I want to say to this House now, that even if you throw out in these three parishes, two in Winton and one in Old Forge, every vote that the contestant claims was procured by fraud, and every vote that was not legally cast and accounted for as cast for Mr. Howell, then you will throw out only 321 votes.

I am not here to assent to or deny that they should not be counted for Mr. Howell, and I have not the time to go through with the evidence sufficiently to satisfy myself on that question, but I wish the House to note that I am now quoting from the majority report, the Republican report, on page 6, and here it appears and is stated in direct terms that the contestant's counsel claimed, so says the report, "that in the Third Ward of Winton 80 votes were received from persons whose names were not on the registry list and from whom no affidavits were required in proof of their right to vote as required by law."

In the Second Ward there were 83—and only 83, as contestant's counsel claim—and in Old Forge there were 158. These are all the votes that the claimant claims were illegal or fraudulently delivered in these three boroughs. Now, if you take all these votes in these wards out, and assume they were cast for Mr. Howell, of which there is nowhere to be found in the report of the evidence any proof whatever, we shall then have 321 votes, and only 321 votes to be cast aside, but that will not overcome the majority of 461, which Mr. Howell had. He will then have a majority of 140, and it seems that the majority of the committee, not satisfied with taking away from Mr. Howell all the fraudulent votes the contestant's counsel claims were fraudulently cast for Mr. Howell, go further and throw out all the votes of these three wards, and that does the trick.

It would seem to one attempting to do exact justice in the premises that if it has been determined just how many fraudulent votes were cast and all those were thrown out no one would have just cause to complain, but the committee has gone further and thrown out the legal votes with the others and thus disfranchised all the honest votes in those three wards as well as the dishonest ones.

The committee in their report recommend that we wipe out all the votes in these three Democratic wards and then go over the rest of the State and take 200 votes more out of about 2,000 that the claimant alleges, but does not prove, were fraudulently cast, just to get up a little respectably appearing majority on the other side, and we will then have reduced the majority of Mr. Howell to nothing and give a majority for Mr. Connell.

In their report they do not claim that they have ascertained the number of votes fraudulently cast for Mr. Howell, but guess at it when they say, as they do in their report, that "at least there are 200 fraudulent votes which should be thrown out."

I say to any fair-minded man on the other side of the House, is it anything more than fair and just, if the claimant goes before the committee and he claims that only 231 votes in these three wards were wrongfully polled, that we should not disfranchise all the other voters in these wards when you know that there are only 231 illegal votes claimed to have been polled for Mr. Howell?

Why, is it not better to say that we will only throw out the 231 claimed by the contestant to have been fraudulently cast and leave the rest as an honest vote? If you do this, my friends, Mr. Howell will have a majority. And now let us consider how they get 200 votes more to be taken from Mr. Howell. The committee seeks to go beyond these three wards out into the other 160 districts all over Lackawanna County and see if they can not scrape up a little majority for Mr. Connell, and this is the method of proving that certain men did not vote who are recorded as having voted. They say they found on the list used a man had voted by the name of "A," and they sent out runners into the neighborhood where "A" is supposed to live.

That runner goes to whoever he sees fit for information, and gets it. Perhaps it is a friend or neighbor or some relative, and they tell him that the man was not here on election day; that he was over in another town or perhaps in another county. You would naturally suppose, would you not, that when this runner got that information he would go over to that town where he was informed A was and ascertain from him the fact whether he did or did not vote, and that when he secured from A the facts would summon him before the commissioner who was taking the evidence and let him testify as to the fact whether he voted or not? This would seem to be the plain duty of the runner if he was only anxious that truth should prevail. But this was never done in a single instance, as the records in the proceedings show.

This runner took the hearsay evidence of those in the neighborhood, and then he comes back and goes before the commissioner and testifies in answer to the interrogatory of Mr. Donovan, Mr. Connell's counsel, who, by the way, seems a sort of veneered Serjeant Buzfuz. He is asked, "Did you look for this man?" "Yes." "Did you make diligent search for him?" "Yes." "Were you satisfied that he was not there?" "Yes." "Then," says Serjeant Buzfuz, "we will conclude that he didn't vote." [Laughter and applause.]

yer, of Johnson County, Mo. I move that the affidavits be referred to the Committee on Pensions to accompany the bill (S. 103) granting an increase of pension to A. D. Tanyer.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 43) to provide for the printing of 3,500 copies of the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, after the word "Commission," in line 4, to insert "with illustrations," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 3,500 copies of the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, with illustrations, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the House of Representatives, and 500 for the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move, in line 4, after the word "report," to add "and appendixes."

Mr. PLATT of New York. That amendment is entirely satisfactory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the title of the resolution be changed. There is no necessity to have a joint resolution for this purpose. A concurrent resolution is just as good. I do not know that there is much difference in them, but I move that "joint" be stricken out and "concurrent" inserted. We will try it anyway.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the several votes by which the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and finally passed will be reconsidered and the resolution will be amended, making it a concurrent instead of a joint resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Let the title be read.

The SECRETARY. Concurrent resolution to provide for the printing of 3,500 copies of the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the concurrent resolution?

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

COURT OF CLAIMS DIGEST.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 41) to provide for the printing of a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, together with the rules of practice and the statutes relating to that court, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. A similar resolution has been passed through the Senate in two Congresses, and I ask that the joint resolution be put on its passage.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, etc., That there be printed a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, including the statutes relating to and the rules of practice of that court, prepared by Chapman W. Maupin; that there be printed 500 copies for the use of the Treasury Department, 2,000 copies for the use of the Attorney-General, 250 copies for the use of the War Department, 250 copies for the use of the Navy Department, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for public sale, the whole edition to be bound in sheep; said digest to be printed under the editorial supervision of Chapman W. Maupin, the preparation and editing of said digest by him to be paid for, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at a price not to exceed the sum of $2,500, which sum is hereby appropriated in full payment for said work, except the cost of printing and binding the same, and shall not be payable until said work shall have been printed; nor shall any money be paid out on account of said work until the Court of Claims, or some member thereof, shall certify that the work, as completed, is satisfactory to that court.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Printing whether the provision that the book is to be bound in sheep excludes the one copy bound in red morocco which Senators always get of all documents?

Mr. PLATT of New York. I suppose it does, unless it is so specified in the joint resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I wish that that might be reserved in the joint resolution.

Mr. PLATT of New York. Will the Senator move an amendment?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think that a resolution of this kind will interfere with the general provision. I have not so understood it at any time.

Mr. HOAR. The sheep binding is exceedingly perishable. It rots.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a nuisance.

Mr. HOAR. It rots under the operation of gas. There is a deposit in a gas-lighted room which makes the leather of sheep and calf binding very perishable after a few years. I believe investigations which have been made show that the most permanent binding, as well as one of the cheapest forms of binding, and the most permanent color, as well as one of the cheapest forms of color, is the red Turkey morocco, of which we get one bound volume each.

This digest of decisions of the Court of Claims is likely to be a book of permanent value. I should like that the one copy which goes to Senators should be bound in morocco, and I therefore desire to put into the joint resolution a proviso:

Provided, That this shall not be construed to prevent the furnishing of one copy bound in red morocco to every member of the Senate and House.

Or something of that sort.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I accept that amendment.

Mr. WARREN. It is my understanding that a Senator has the right to have one copy of any bound document that comes to him rebound, no matter how it may be bound. The proposition here to bind in sheep is, as I understand it, simply to take care of the books in usual law-book binding rather than to have them in paper, as public documents usually are, and it is not to interfere with the usual rule of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator thinks it does not, I will not trouble the Senate with the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator knows better than I do about it, but they have always rebound a volume for me when I asked that it be done.

Mr. HOAR. The chairman of the Committee on Printing said he had understood that the joint resolution would exclude our getting a copy bound in morocco unless there was an exception made in the joint resolution. I defer to his opinion on this subject.

Mr. PLATT of New York. It is well enough to put it in the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. There is no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask about the cost of binding in sheep. I think it is the worst possible binding we could have. I would rather have it in cloth than in sheep. Cloth will last a little while, and sheep will not. It seems to me that any kind of binding would be preferable to sheep.

Mr. PLATT of New York. Will the Senator from Missouri move an amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the cost of the different kinds of binding to designate which is preferable, but I am certain that some kinds of binding are as cheap as sheep, if not cheaper, and much better.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri if it would not be a good plan to amend the joint resolution by eliminating all reference to binding and leave it with the Committee on Printing to designate in what way the volumes shall be bound?

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the sheep binding is the ordinary law-book binding, the binding of all the books for the law library.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know it is.

Mr. WARREN. The only intention of the joint resolution is to have the digest prepared and bound in the way that other law books are finished.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Massachusetts has just made a suggestion which lodged in my mind, that almost all bound documents are bound in sheep. Almost all law books, text-books, reports of State courts, and the reports of the Federal courts are in sheep binding. If anyone goes into a great law library what meet him are rows upon rows in sheep, and so with the books of lawyers in their own libraries. I suppose it has been considered a safe kind of binding. It is not as agreeable in appearance as other binding, but it has served its purpose for a great many years.

What I wanted to ask the Senator in charge of the joint resolution besides is, what does the digest cover?

Mr. PLATT of New York. Let the title be read again.

Mr. HALE. Let the first part of the joint resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That there be printed a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, including the statutes relating to and the rules of practice of that court.

Mr. HALE. Now, here is a valuable court, which has been rendering decisions for more than thirty years.

Mr. COCKRELL. For over forty years.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator know that there is not to-day a digest of the reports of the Court of Claims?

Mr. PLATT of New York. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] who introduced the joint resolution as to that.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would explain it. I can hardly see how otherwise the decisions of that court could have been of any use to the public or to the profession. Every lawyer and every man with any experience in any kind of literature knows that any work is practically good for nothing unless it has a good digest.

Mr. ALLISON. And an index.

Mr. HALE. And an index besides. It is the case with every law book and every important series of law reports. I know in my own State we provide every few years for a good digest, bringing the reports up to the time when we provide for it, and in ten years we provide for another digest, and the volumes are all thoroughly indexed besides.

I wish the Senator who fathers this proposition would tell us what there is to-day existing, and whether this is a crying need, or whether it is a work which has been compiled by some one who wants to get paid for it. We have a great deal of that sort of business before the Senate constantly. Somebody or other in a vacation, usually some one who is drawing pay from the Government, who is a salaried employee or official, sets to work to get up a compilation, a digest, a statement of appropriations; and we are very liberal and very generous about it and let it go. We spend thousands upon thousands and tens of thousands of dollars every year on just such matters.

Now, this particular matter is all as unknown to me as if it were in the blackest of darkness. I do not know if anything of that kind obtains; but I wish the Senator would tell us, first, what is the situation of these reports as to the present digest, who it is who is to make this digest, whether he is connected with the Government in any way or connected with the court, and whether he is a lawyer; for one who is not a good lawyer can not make a digest. A man who is not a good lawyer can not make a digest any more than a farm hand can build a cottage. It is a faculty that must be matured and sharpened by knowledge of the law. I wish the Senator from Wyoming would explain just what are the circumstances surrounding this matter.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Maine that I am not as familiar at this hour with the matter as at a former day. I can only say that it was carefully looked up by the Committee on Claims in the last Congress. There is no digest covering the ground that this publication proposes to cover, and the court is now using the typewritten copy of a portion of this work, which has been prepared by Mr. Maupin, a lawyer.

The Court of Claims is, I understand, making some use of a partial digest, or a portion of this proposed digest, which is at present in a typewritten form, and of course there is only one copy or at most two or three copies. The court has recommended that it be printed, desiring it for its own use and for others who have to consult decisions of the Court of Claims.

I depended at the time, of course, and so did the committee, quite largely upon the recommendation of the court, and I have not that or the other papers at hand at the present moment. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing that the joint resolution shall lie over for a day, so that we may look up the matter further.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to interfere with what may be a valuable thing; but I think the Senate ought to know upon what ground the court recommended this publication, who it is who has made or is making the digest, whether he is an employee of the court or is a clerk, and what is the basis. Perhaps the Senator from New York had better let the joint resolution go over, and then the Senator from Wyoming will furnish us with the authority of the court.

Mr. PLATT of New York. That course will be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. HALE. Let it go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution goes to the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. I do not thus understand it that the proposition is to take it to the Calendar, but it is that it shall go over and come up to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator from New York withdraw his report and then he can make it to-morrow morning.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I will withdraw the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks leave to withdraw the report. The Chair hears no objection, and the report is withdrawn.

NEBRASKA SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. HOAR on the 5th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses to be incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate and report to the Senate all the facts connected with the appointment of Jacob Fisher as postmaster at Hastings, Nebr., and the leasing of the building used at this time for a post-office in that city, and particularly to investigate and report as to the action of CHARLES H. DIETRICH, a Senator from Nebraska, in connection with such appointment and leasing, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee.

COMPILATION OF TREATIES IN FORCE.

Mr. CULLOM. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report a resolution which I ask may be considered at this time.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a revised edition of the Compilation of Treaties in Force be prepared under the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations and that there be inserted in said revised edition all treaties proclaimed and in force at the end of the present session, and that there shall be printed 1,500 copies of said revised edition, 1,000 for the use of the House of Representatives and 500 for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from Illinois intend this as a Senate resolution only?

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose it is not necessary to make it a concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It provides for the printing of a certain number of copies for the use of the House as well as the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. It would have to be a joint resolution, I suppose, in that case.

Mr. COCKRELL. Or a concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Or a concurrent resolution. The Chair thinks that it should be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BACON. I suggest that before the reference is made it be converted into a concurrent resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not inclined to do that, because of the difficulty in getting action upon it in that form. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BACON. The publication ought to be confined to the use of the Senate if it is to remain a simple Senate resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PRINTING OF REPORT ON ALASKA.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Territories to ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document the Report of the Operations of the United States Revenue Steamer Nunivak on the Yukon River Station, Alaska, 1899 and 1901.

I will state to the Senate that it is a very important work. It gives a vast amount of valuable information touching the interior of Alaska of which the Senate and the House should be in possession. About 500 copies were printed for the use of the Treasury Department, but the edition is exhausted. We desire to have it reprinted as a Senate document, including the plates. The plates, of course, are in the possession of the printing department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks that the Report of the Operations of the United States Revenue Steamer Nunivak may be printed as a Senate document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made. Are there illustrations?

Mr. PATTERSON. There are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the printing should include maps and illustrations.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is the desire of the committee.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the Report of the Cperations of the United States Revenue Steamer Nunivak on the Yukon River Station, Alaska, 1899-1901, together with the maps and illustrations, be printed as a document.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. BACON on the 12th ultimo, as modified by him on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully informed that the Senate favor and advise the negotiation, with a view to its ratification, of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia, to the end that there may be peacefully and satisfactorily determined and adjusted all differences between the United States and the Republic of Colombia, with the intent of removing any cause of irritation or conflict, and of restoring the cordial relations heretofore existing between the United States and Colombia, and also of securing the hearty cooperation of the Colombian people in the construction of the canal at Panama.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, at the opening of this discussion but two general points were considered by the Senate. The first was the attitude of the President of the United States in carrying out the provisions of the Spooner law. The second was the attitude of the President and the Administration in reference to affairs connected with the Panama insurrection.

Since that time the debate has broadened out to such an extent that it has taken into consideration many other things than those two cardinal propositions; and it might not be inappropriate to converge this argument back to the original two propositions, the only propositions that, it seems to me, are worthy of consideration at this time.

It seems to me, Mr. President, in the discussion so far, that too little stress has been laid upon the duty which was imposed upon the President of the United States under the Spooner Act to secure right of way across the Isthmus of Panama. That duty was imposed upon him as the agent of the United States. I am well aware that there was an alternative provision in that law that the President, if he was unable to secure the requisite concession from the Colombian Government, should then proceed to enter into negotiations for the Nicaraguan route. But I do not believe, Mr. President, that there were many Senators who voted for that provision with the understanding or expectation that it would ever be called into being. It was considered really as a kind of diplomatic hint to the Colombian Government that this Government was not entirely at its mercy; and I believe it was so considered by nearly every Senator upon this floor.

The discussion so far on the opposite side of the Chamber seems to have gone upon the assumption that if the Colombian Government, in the first instance, should have declined our overtures for a proper treaty, it was then the duty of the President of the United States, without any further effort, without any further consideration, to immediately abandon the project of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama and proceed at once to secure the requisite agreement with the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica for a canal by the Nicaraguan route.

This, Mr. President, was not the spirit of that law. A duty was imposed upon the President of the United States—a duty which he could not abandon until he had exercised all of the diplomatic power of the Government to secure for the United States the particular route which the Congress of the United States had stated in their law they desired.

Mr. President, the whole question of the attitude and action of the President and the executive branches of the Government in reference to the treaty for a canal across the Isthmus of Panama, in reference to the law authorizing the President to enter into negotiations for the Nicaragua route in the event of his failure to secure the requisite authority from Colombia, and of his duty in reference to the Panama revolution, when shorn of all verbiage, reduces itself to two simple propositions:

First. Has there been any time since the 28th day of June, 1902, the date of the Spooner law, up to the present time when the President of the United States could have properly abandoned his efforts to secure a treaty for the construction of the canal across the Isthmus of Panama and to have proceeded to enter into negotiations for the northern route?

Second. Has the President of the United States by any act since the threatened uprising in Panama up to the present time failed to follow the precepts of international law, to follow the precedents of American policy in reference to the South American Republics, or has he in any manner taken any step in reference to the revolutionary movement not dictated by sound judgment, by international justice, or by his patriotic duty to the American people?

Mr. President, all that has been done so far by the Administration has been given to the Senate and House of Representatives. Every act, every order, every direction given by the President of the United States or by any officers of the Administration has been laid before the Senate, and the President, in a special note to this House, has declared absolutely that this Government has not taken any step or done any act to instigate a revolution in Panama, nor has it taken any side whatever in the controversy. The President of the United States having made this statement, I do not believe that there is a Senator upon this floor who will gainsay its absolute verity. I believe all will concede that that statement is absolutely true.

This eliminates, therefore, from this discussion the proposition that the President of the United States or the Administration is responsible in any manner whatever for the uprising on the Isthmus of Panama or responsible for any acts which have been done in connection with the revolutionary movement.

The course of the Administration in reference to this matter has not been demonstrated by a single act or instruction, but by a series of acts and instructions covering a period from the time the duty was first imposed upon him by the Spooner Act up to the present time. And every act, every order, and every instruction given by the Administration must be considered together in their entirety to determine their propriety. And I would ask any Senator to lay his finger on that point in the history of the whole transaction where it became the duty of the President to abandon his efforts to secure what the American people had made it his duty to secure—the right of way across the Isthmus of Panama for a canal.

The matter intrusted to him was one of no small concern. It was one of the most colossal enterprises ever entered upon or ever intrusted to a nation or its ruler. It had never had its equal in the history of the world; it was to affect the commercial interests of this country in a measure beyond computation; it was to change and guide into new channels the ocean traffic of the whole world; it was, therefore, to affect all the people of all the nations of the world, and it was to affect them for all time; it was to affect our national defense beyond any and all acts that had ever been passed; it was to connect the two great oceans, to connect our Atlantic and our Pacific coast lines, which to-day are separated by about 9,000 miles of sea around the entire South American continent. It was a matter which would involve the expenditure of probably half a billion dollars before the canal would be complete and ready for the world's traffic.

The American people had spoken, Mr. President, for that particular route; they had spoken not in unmeaning terms of their choice. There were grave and potent national reasons for this particular route, reasons that affect the safety of the canal itself and the safety of vessels passing through it. Why this route was regarded as preeminently the proper one was considered fully on this floor. Those reasons were discussed by Members of Congress and by the press of the country. They were reasons which had the convincing power to change previous opinions as to location. Chief among those reasons was, first, a canal that could in time be made a sea-level canal, and, second, a canal that could be traversed in the shortest possible time by our war vessels. When the President of the United States acted upon the trust committed to him, he knew these conditions, he knew the importance of this particular location, and he knew that he was expected to secure the route selected by the American Congress. We said to him, "Secure the Panama route as our coast line." That was what he set about doing, and so long as any reasonable hope was held out to him it would have been a recreant act on his part to have turned to the alternative provided in the law. Considering his acts in the light of that duty, I want to know at what period of time or on the occurrence of what event or act by the Colombian Congress he could have turned his attention to Ni aragua without inviting the criticism and even the condemnation of the people whose interest he was to subserve?

Let us take up in their order just a few of the leading incidents in the history of diplomatic efforts to carry out the provisions of the Spooner Act, remembering, Mr. President, that communication between this country and its representative at Bogota had been a matter of almost daily correspondence.

Acting upon the authority contained in this act, the President secured from the Bogota Government the proposed treaty which this Government was to acquiesce in. The treaty was submitted. It was hampered by many conditions obnoxious to the country, but these conditions were not allowed to weigh as against the necessity of this particular route. In other words, we were willing to accept them rather than to have more favorable conditions attached to a less favorable location. This treaty was finally accepted by the American people and returned for the concurrence of the Colombian legislature. What has taken place since that time is fresh in the mind of every public man, and yet it seems to me that it will not be amiss at this time to recall a few of the most important acts, orders, and correspondence which passed between the executive branches of our Government and our representatives at Bogota and Panama. I have selected a number of them which I shall read, so as to show their continuity and the continued hope which was held out to the President that there was no necessity at any time to abandon this enterprise.

On the 9th day of July Mr. Beaupré sent the following message to Secretary Hay:

[Confidential.]

—— has requested me to say to you he does not think the treaty can be ratified without two amendments: To article 1, stipulating payment ten millions by the canal company for the right to transfer; to article 25, increasing payment to fifteen millions, and says that treaty can be ratified at once with these amendments. He asks your views confidentially.

On the 13th day of July Secretary Hay responded to this request, as follows:

Hay to Beaupré.

JULY 13.

Neither of the proposed amendments mentioned in your telegram received to-day would stand any chance of acceptance by the Senate of the United States, while any amendment whatever, or any unnecessary delay in the ratification of the treaty would greatly imperil its consummation.

Certainly at this time the President could not have abandoned the enterprise for a canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

On the 12th of August Mr. Beaupré sent the following message:

Beaupré to Hay.

AUGUST 12. (Received 15th.)

The treaty was rejected by the Senate to-day in its entirety. Confidential. Do not accept this as final. There is still some hope. Wait for further advices.

Certainly this would have been an inopportune moment for the President of the United States to have abandoned his efforts to secure a canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

Again, on August 12, the following messages were sent:

Beaupré to Hay.

AUGUST 12. (Received 23d.)

The most important speech made was that of General Ospina. It was to the effect that while desiring canal he could not give his vote for the ratification of the treaty because the terms were contrary to the provisions of the constitution. He implied that to bring negotiations to a conclusion the constitution should be modified so as to allow negotiations to be brought to a successful conclusion without prejudice to the honor of the country. * * * He intimated that the Congress should be immediately dismissed by a decree for the purpose of modifying the constitution. Upon that a new law will be passed authorizing the executive without further recourse to Congress to conclude a canal treaty with the United States.

Beaupré to Hay.

AUGUST 12.

—— called to inform me that this day's action of Congress was in accordance with plans perfected by the Government and influential senators and citizens in the belief that the treaty could not now be passed without amendments, but within a very short time such a reaction public sentiment can be created as will enable the President to present the treaty and secure its passage without amendments.

Here, Mr. President, was the hope again held out to the American people that the particular route which we had selected could be secured.

Passing now to August 15, we have another message from Mr. Beaupré to Mr. Hay:

Beaupré to Hay.

AUGUST 15.

I have the honor to report that the most intensely critical period for the canal treaty seems to have passed; that now there is some hope for a satisfactory conclusion. Since the rejection of the treaty on the 12th instant there has been an almost hysterical condition of alarm and uncertainty in Bogota as to future action of the United States. * * * When finally large posters were put up all over the city announcing that because of a desire to maintain the most cordial relations with the United States a joint committee would be appointed by Congress to confer as to the way and means of an agreement for the construction of a canal, I am certain that there was a genuine feeling of relief.

When action was taken on the 12th instant no one in authority believed that it was final.

General Ospina, chairman of the new committee, stated to a friend of mine yesterday that the main objections to the treaty rested upon lawful and constitutional grounds; that the treaty was not unconstitutional, but contrary to law 2 of 1836 and law 153 of 1887; that the committee could recommend the annulment of these laws, which, if done, would permit the ratification of the treaty with some trivial amendment intended to soothe the apparent inconsistency of the two votes.

The feasible scheme, however, and the one most generally talked of as being likely to be adopted is to frame a law authorizing the Executive to continue and finish the negotiations for a canal without further recourse to Congress.

Beaupré to Hay.

AUGUST 17. (Received 25th.)

The President informs me that Congress will pass law authorizing him to continue and finish negotiations for canal, but what conditions will be specified he can not state at the present moment.

Twelve days later, on the 29th of August, Mr. Beaupré sent the following message to Secretary Hay:

Hay to Beaupré.

AUGUST 29.

The President is bound by the isthmian-canal statutes, commonly called the "Spooner law." By its provisions he is given a reasonable time to arrange a satisfactory treaty with Colombia. When, in his judgment, the reasonable time has expired, and he has not been able to make a satisfactory arrangement as to the Panama route, he will then proceed to carry into effect the alternative of the statute. Meantime the President will enter into no engagement restraining his freedom of action under the statute.

Up to this time, Mr. President, there was no interim in which the President of the United States could have said that the time was now opportune for him to reject further consideration of a treaty for an isthmian canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

On September 5 Mr. Beaupré sent the following message to Secretary Hay:

Beaupré to Hay.

SEPTEMBER 5. (Received 11th.)

Have received telegram 29th. The committee have reported a law which approves the rejection of the treaty and authorizes the President to conclude treaties with Panama for canal.

Then follows requirement for annual payment of $250,000, transfer of property to Colombia in 1967, canal company permitted to transfer on payment to Colombia of ten millions.

Lease of zone for one hundred years, not including Panama or Colon; annual rental $150,000 until 1967; lease renewing every hundred years, on payment of 25 per cent increase. Colombia to receive from contracting government twenty millions on ratification of treaty.

On the 11th of September the following message passed between them:

Beaupré to Hay.

SEPTEMBER 11.

I have the honor to report that events of interest have taken place in connection with the appointment of Senator Obaldia to the post of governor of the Department of Panama. Senator Obaldia's separatist tendencies are well known, and he is reported to have said that should the canal treaty not pass the Department of Panama would declare its independence and would be right in doing so.

This was the first intimation, Mr. President, we had of the probability that there would be a revolution at that time, and yet no word of encouragement passed from the executive department, the Department of State simply attempting right along to secure this coveted treaty for the Panama Canal.

On the 30th of September Mr. Beaupré sent to Secretary Hay the following message:

Beaupré to Hay.

SEPTEMBER 30.

Senator Rivas said that by simply rejecting this proposed law and adding no further legislation the Government would be left at full liberty to negotiate without restriction such terms as could be obtained and would be honorable and just to the contracting parties. He felt confident that this plan would be accepted by the Senate and confirmed by the Chamber of Representatives.

If the Senate takes this step, and there seems to be a reasonable probability that it will, the canal matter will stand just as it did the day after its rejection on August 12, or, in fact, as it did before the treaty was signed in Washington on January 22, 1903.

Passing now to the 17th of October, Mr. Beaupré sent the following message to Secretary Hay:

Beaupré to Hay.

OCTOBER 17. (Received 19.)

Have received information confidentially that there was a meeting of the cabinet yesterday to discuss the question of renewing canal negotiations with the United States and that the adjournment of Congress will be followed by the mission of a special envoy to Washington for that purpose. The President's message dissolving Congress will be delivered probably before the 30th instant.

When we had been notified by the Colombian Government that, notwithstanding the rejection of this treaty, they would immediately send a special envoy to Washington for the purpose of renewing negotiations, I submit that the President of the United States, under the duty imposed upon him by the Spooner Act, could not, without being recreant to that duty, have at that time refused to consider further overtures on the part of the Colombian Government.

Beaupré to Hay.

OCTOBER 21.

I have the honor to inform you that there is no disguising the alarm existing as to the possible action of the Government of the United States should the feeling of dissatisfaction undoubtedly existing in the Department of Panama find expression in overt acts. The alarm took the form of a heated debate in the Senate yesterday, when the Government was again attacked for the appointment of Senator Obaldia as governor of Panama. The reply elicited from the minister for foreign affairs was rather significant. He read an extract from the treaty of 1846, in which the United States guaranteed Colombian sovereignty on the Isthmus, and assured the Senate that in case of an insurrection in the Department of Panama the United States would be bound to support the Government. * * *

The situation is disturbing, and now a further delay is quite apparently for the purpose of awaiting the action of President Roosevelt in his message to the special session of our Congress, which is to meet, it is understood here, on the 9th proximo, and the attitude of that Congress upon receiving the President's message.

Beaupré to Hay.

OCTOBER 23. (Received 24th.)

The report of the committee not yet discussed. It appears to me the Congress is playing a waiting game, evidently with the object of ascertaining the attitude of the President of the United States in message to the extra session of Congress and of that body. It is said that Congress will not adjourn until the 14th proximo. The minister of foreign affairs gives me private information that at the next meeting the cabinet will again discuss the canal question, it being proposed to send an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary and also a commission of three prominent men to Washington to renew negotiations.

Beaupré to Hay.

OCTOBER 31. (Received November 6.)

Congress adjourned to-day. No action has been taken upon the last report concerning the canal. Therefore nothing more than the vote of August 12 rejecting the treaty was done. The people here have great anxiety over conflicting report of secession movements in the Cauca and Panama.

Come down now to the 1st day of November, 1903. It will be recalled that this was ten days after the call for the extra session of Congress. At this time the following message from Mr. Beaupré to Secretary Hay was received:

Beaupré to Hay.

NOVEMBER 1. (Received November 3.)

With regard to canal (Government) states that Colombian chargé d'affaires has been instructed to inform the Government of the United States that the Colombian Government would consider new negotiations, which it is believed would be accepted by the next session of Congress. Therefore, if the Government of the United States still desires to open a canal, which it is presumed that it does, as neither by act nor word has it shown other intention, it is to be hoped that the great work will be carried out in the end through Colombian territory.

Considering, Mr. President, that at this time the special session of Congress had already been called, and at this time the Colombian Government itself, for reasons which it may have considered valid, still desired further consideration, I want to ask any Senator if he can conscientiously say that, under the Spooner Act, the President of the United States could even at this time have abandoned his efforts and rejected the overtures on the part of the Colombian Government to carry that law into effect?

On the 6th day of November Mr. Beaupré sent to Secretary Hay the following message:

Beaupré to Hay.

NOVEMBER 6. (Received 8th.)

Knowing that the revolution has already commenced in Panama, —— says that if Government of the United States will land troops to preserve the Colombian sovereignty and the transit, if requested by the Colombian chargé d'affaires, this Government will declare martial law, and by virtue of vested constitutional authority when public order is restored, will approve by decree the ratification of the canal treaty as signed; or, if the Government of the United States prefers, will call extra session of Congress with new and friendly members next May to approve the treaty.

As to construction of our duty as to Colombian sovereignty, see letter, Seward to Burton, Document No. 51, page 99, as follows:

I read this message at this time, Mr. President, because I shall comment upon it a little further on in my address.

I wish now to consider for a few moments some of the messages which passed between the Department of State and our representatives at Colon and at Panama. We have now reached a point up to November 4, 1903. This is a message from Acting Secretary Loomis to Mr. Ehrman:

Loomis to Ehrman.

NOVEMBER 4.

Communicate with commander of gunboat, Bogota, and state plainly that this Government, being responsible for maintaining peace and keeping transit open across the Isthmus, desires him to refrain from wantonly shelling the city. We shall have a naval force in two days and are now ordering men from the Nashville to Panama in the interests of peace.

Is there anything in this early message, Mr. President, to indicate the intention upon the part of the Government of the United States or the Administration in any way to prevent the Colombian Government from putting down the attempted rebellion in Panama? It is simply a declaration that we shall protect the transit under our treaty. Mr. Ehrman, on the 5th day of November, sends back the following message:

Ehrman to Hay.

NOVEMBER 5.

Colombian troops reembarked per Royal Mail for Cartagena. Bogota supposed at Buenaventura. Quiet prevails.

On the 6th day of November there was not, I believe, a single Colombian soldier upon the Isthmus of Panama. On that day the following message was sent from Mr. Ehrman to Secretary Hay:

Ehrman to Hay.

NOVEMBER 6.

The situation is peaceful. Isthmian movement has obtained so far success. Colon and interior provinces have enthusiastically joined independence. Not any Colombian soldiers known on isthmian soil at present. Pagella equipped to pursue Bogota. Bunau-Varilla has been appointed officially confidential agent of the Republic of Panama at Washington.

What message up to this time, up to the very time in which there was not a single Colombian soldier left upon the Isthmus of Panama, would lead any man to believe that it was the intention of this Government to interfere in the conflict between the Province of Panama and the Colombian Government?

On the 6th day of November we have the following message from Secretary Hay to Mr. Ehrman:

Hay to Ehrman.

NOVEMBER 6.

The people of Panama have by apparently unanimous movement dissolved their political connection with the Republic of Colombia and resumed their independence. When you are satisfied that a de facto government, republican in form and without substantial opposition from its own people, has been established in the State of Panama, you will enter into relations with it as the responsible government of the territory and look to it for all due action to protect the persons and property of the citizens of the United States and to keep open the isthmian transit in accordance with the obligations of existing treaties governing the relation of the United States to that territory.

There is the first message that was sent at the time it is stated we acknowledged the independence of Panama. Is there anything in that instruction which is contrary to the precepts of international law? Secretary Hay says:

When you are satisfied that a de facto government, republican in form and without substantial opposition from its own people, has been established in the State of Panama, you will enter into relations with it.

Is that not in accordance with international law? Is not that the rule which is followed by every great nation in the world? What else could the Secretary of State have done at that time? There was no attempt at interference, there was nothing to signify that our representative should be hasty, but that he should wait until there was an absolute government there and no substantial opposition to it anywhere. That condition prevailed, Mr. President, when we acknowledged the independence of Panama.

Let us consider the conditions at the other end of the route across the Isthmus:

Malmros to Hay.

NOVEMBER 3.

Revolution imminent. Government forces on the Isthmus about 500 men. Their official promised to support revolution. Fire department, Panama, 441, are well organized and favor revolution. Government vessel Cartagena, with about 400 men, arrived early to-day with new commander in chief, Tobar. Was not expected until November 10. Tobar's arrival is not probable to stop revolution.

Malmros to Hay.

NOVEMBER 3.

Troops from vessel Cartagena have disembarked; are encamping on Pacific dock, awaiting orders to proceed to Panama from commander in chief, who went there this morning. No message for Nashville received.

On the 4th day of November, from the same city, we have the following:

Malmros to Hay.

NOVEMBER 4.

Revolutionary committee of six in Panama at 6 p. m. took charge of revolutionary movement. General Tobar and five officers taken prisoners. Panama in possession of committee with consent of entire population. This fact appears not known as yet to conservatives in Colon. Panama committee expect to have 1,500 armed men by this time.

On the next day we find the following message from Malmros to Hay:

Malmros to Hay.

NOVEMBER 5.

All Colombian soldiers at Colon now, 7 p. m., going on board Royal Mail steamer returning to Cartagena. Vessel supposed to be Dixie in sight.

I will quote but one more of these messages, and this is from the Navy Department, sent on the 3d day of November to the Nashville, at Colon:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, November 3.

NASHVILLE, Colon:

In the interest of peace make every effort to prevent Government troops at Colon from proceeding to Panama. The transit of the Isthmus must be kept open and order maintained. Acknowledge.

DARLING, Acting.

Mr. President, on the 6th day of November there was not a single Colombian soldier on the Isthmus of Panama; there was not a single Colombian soldier, so far as we know, on his way at that time; every one had surrendered to the Panama authorities, and there was no objection to the revolution anywhere upon the Isthmus. The people rose as one individual and supported the revolution. They set up a government of their own. What could the Government of the United States have done but to recognize it as a de facto government? What other government was there that could have been recognized to protect our interests and to protect our treaty rights at that place?

The President knew, Mr. President, as everyone then knew, that if the treaty was repudiated by the Colombian Government the Province of Panama would probably revolt and set up an independent government, and would then offer us the right of way across the Isthmus.

Now, if that is true, and all the records show that it is true, is it not another very strong reason why the President should have awaited the probable outcome of this proposed and intended revolution? Is it not a reason why he should defer opening negotiations with Nicaragua, bearing in mind at all times that it was his first, his primary duty to secure this route, if it could be secured, not necessarily from the parties that then controlled the Colombian Government, but from any party or any authority representing that Government or representing the district across which the canal was proposed to be built?

Very extended argument has been made here, Mr. President, upon the proposition that the Government of Colombia was not in any way in duty bound to grant us the right of way across the Isthmus of Panama. I can not agree with that proposition. I take the position that under the treaty of 1846 we not only had the right to guarantee the neutrality of any means or method of crossing the Isthmus of Panama, but at that time we had in connection with it an implied grant that upon reasonable considerations we might build a canal across the Isthmus.

I wish to call attention to just one portion of the treaty of 1846 with New Granada. Under article 35 we find the following:

The Government of New Granada guarantees to the Government of the United States that the right of way or transit across the Isthmus of Panama upon any modes of communication that now exist, or that may be hereafter constructed, shall be open and free to the Government and citizens of the United States and for the transportation of any articles of produce, manufactures, or merchandise, of lawful commerce belonging to the citizens of the United States; that no other tolls or charges shall be levied or collected upon the citizens of the United States, or their said merchandise thus passing over any road or canal that may be made by the Government of New Granada, or by the authority of the same, than is under like circumstances levied upon and collected from the Granadian citizens.

There is clearly implied in this a grant of a right of way across the Isthmus for the purpose of building a canal. It may not be as clear as might possibly be expected, but inasmuch as we may say there is a latent ambiguity there, then we have a right to go to the surrounding circumstances to determine what was the real meaning of the parties to the contract in these provisions. That is shown in the message of the President of the United States of February 15, 1847, to Congress. In the message transmitting this very treaty he states:

It will be perceived by the thirty-fifth article of this treaty that New Granada proposes to guarantee to the Government and citizens of the United States the right of passage across the Isthmus of Panama, over the natural roads, and over any canal or railroad which may be constructed to unite the two seas, on condition that the United States shall make a similar guaranty to New Granada of the neutrality of this portion of her territory and her sovereignty over the same.

What is the consideration that is expressed by the President of the United States? It is simply that in consideration of this guaranty of neutrality and the guaranty of the protection of the rights of Colombia as against any foreign country Colombia upon her part guarantees not only the neutrality of this zone, but in addition thereto she gave us the implied right to construct a canal across the Isthmus.

Again, the President states:

4. In entering into the mutual guaranties proposed by the 35th article of the treaty, neither the Government of New Granada nor that of the United States has any narrow or exclusive views. The ultimate object, as presented by the Senate of the United States in their resolution to which I have already referred, is to secure to all nations the free and equal right of passage over the Isthmus.

If the United States, as the chief of the American nations, should first become a party to this guaranty, it can not be doubted—indeed, it is confidently expected by the Government of New Granada—that similar guaranties will be given to that Republic by Great Britain and France. Should the proposition thus tendered be rejected, we may deprive the United States of the just influence which its acceptance might secure to them and confer the glory and benefits of being first among the nations in concluding such an arrangement upon the Government either of Great Britain or France. That either of these Governments would embrace the offer can not well be doubted; because there does not appear to be any other effectual means of securing to all nations the advantages of this important passage but the guaranty of great commercial powers that the Isthmus shall be neutral territory. The interests of the world at stake are so important that the security of this passage between the two oceans can not be suffered to depend upon the wars and revolutions which may arise among different nations.

The President goes on to say:

Besides, such a guaranty is almost indispensable to the construction of a rail road or canal across the territory. Neither sovereign states nor individuals would expend their capital in the construction of these expensive works without some such security for their investments.

Mr. President, I have read these extracts from this message for the purpose of showing that it was the expectation and the intent in entering into this treaty that it would be followed during the life of the treaty with a canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. President, if the Colombian Government was so recreant to its own interest, so blind to its own duty, as to decline this most favorable treaty, which its own Government had submitted to this country for ratification, that its people rose and threw off its yoke, was it not the duty then of the President of the United States, acting on behalf of his people, charged with the duty of securing a strip of land across the Panama Isthmus, to wait, and if a government was established there which had some sense of right—and I might almost say decency, when I consider the dishonorable proposition submitted to this Government, of being a party to the robbery of the New Panama Canal Company—and should tender a proper treaty, to accept that treaty?

While I am not prepared to advocate the policy of international eminent domain to be followed by this Government under any circumstances that I know of, I can say that the great end to be gained, the colossal importance to this country of an easement over this little strip of land, the importance to 80,000,000 now living and to the hundreds of millions in a not remote future; when I consider the vast importance of the project as a matter of national defense; when I recall that we offered an exorbitant price for the right that ought in all conscience to have been gladly given; when I recall that our proposed act would equally benefit the people of Colombia and could not under any possible contingency be detrimental to their interest; when I recall the meager number, the mere handful, of people obstructing the progress of the whole world for no higher or more patriotic reason than that of levying a tribute, an exorbitant tribute, upon necessity; when I recall all these things, I want to say that if conditions had not reached the point where a rule of international eminent domain would have been reconcilable with a clear national conscience, they certainly were crowding close and very close to that line.

At least it must be said with absolute certainty that the conditions reached that point where executive diplomacy should be pressed to its full limit and seize upon any legitimate opportunity which would secure its beneficent object.

Mr. President, suppose the Egyptian government had refused under any reasonable circumstances and conditions to have allowed the Suez Canal to be cut across the Isthmus of Suez? Does anyone for a moment believe that the combined nations of Europe would not have compelled her under reasonable terms and conditions to have yielded this point? And does anyone believe that the public opinion of the world would not have justified such action, call it by what name you see fit?

But, Mr. President, it was not necessary in this case that we should go to that limit. Nothing approaching it even was exercised. All that was necessary was that when Panama did revolt, had set up a separate government, when she had at least a de facto government capable of acting for the people and to which the people yielded obedience, the President should recognize it as a government, and he was justified in recognizing it for the very purpose of securing this treaty if for no other purpose.

Mr. President, it is unnecessary under our Constitution to discuss the question whether the President or Congress has the power to acknowlege or recognize any government. It is enough to say that for good and sufficient reasons that power was by the Constitution of the United States conferred upon the President; and that power having been conferred upon him without let or hindrance, or even the advice of Congress, it was intended that his judgment, and his judgment alone, should determine whether a country had gained its independence and the conditions precedent which would authorize him in his own judgment to exercise the executive function of recognizing such a government as one of the nations of the world.

Was this not, in fact, such a government? Let us see. Was it less a government at the time it was recognized as such by the President than it is at the present time?

Is it not an independent self-government now? If not, what power is controlling the Isthmus of Panama? Was this authority impeded in any way or was there any imminent danger of the Province being subjugated by the Colombian Government on the 6th day of November, 1903? Were the people themselves supporting the revolutionary movement inaugurated by what you may call the leaders, if you see fit? Was any Colombian army then in Panama territory able to subjugate the Isthmus? On the 6th day of November there was not a Colombian soldier left in the Province.

But, Mr. President, it is stated that they have no legislature there; that they have none of the requisites of a government; that they have no courts or any system of protecting the rights of the people. I am not aware that this is true; I am not aware that the rights of these people are not safeguarded as much to-day as they ever have been in the history of that Province. I am willing to admit that no such form of republican government exists in that territory as exists in the United States. "Republican form of government" has a certain meaning in this country. It means the orderly election of officials by a people supreme in their authority and acting upon their own judgment. But if that were to be taken as a standard, there has never been a South American republic up to the present time. It is not for us and not for the Executive to scan too closely the methods by which any South American republic is to be governed and gauge them by an American standard. If the people are satisfied with the form of government, and if it is not a monarchial government—for I take it that this Government is in duty bound to discourage a monarchial system and to see that every country upon this side of the Atlantic Ocean which has thrown off monarchial forms of government shall remain a republic—it is the duty of this Government to recognize the power in control.

If, as a matter of fact, the action of the Executive was accentuated by the desire of securing a proper treaty that he so early acknowledged the de facto Government of Panama, he was certainly, in my opinion, and I believe in the opinion of the American people, justified in so doing.

We must remember, Mr. President, that the President was made our agent to secure that particular route. That was the primary object. He was to use the diplomacy of the Government of the United States for that particular object, and certainly he could not excuse himself until he had exhausted all the power of the Government, legitimately exercised, to secure this canal treaty. Had he done anything else, then instead of observing the Spooner law, he would have disobeyed it, beyond any possible question; and not only in spirit but the letter of that law.

In a matter of this kind, Mr. President, three or four days or a week is of little importance. The same kind of government that we recognized was within a half a month recognized by every great power of the Old World, and these powers, I believe, intend to act strictly upon international precedents and law.

These people set up an independent government, and almost coincident with that act they tendered us just what we had asked; they tendered us a strip of land over which we would have absolute control, equivalent to complete sovereignty, a treaty a hundredfold more favorable than that first submitted by the Colombian Government. Could the President now refuse? If he did so, what would be his position before the people? Would he be fulfilling the obligations of law imposing upon him the duty to secure this transit, or would he be violating the law?

Mr. President, the responsibility now lies with Congress. We can now say whether or not we will accept from Panama what was refused us by Colombia. The opportunity now presents itself for us to secure the canal which has been the hope and aspiration of the American people for more than half a century. What is the duty now of Congress, irrespective of party or partisan feeling?

Can any Senator who at heart favors an isthmian canal excuse himself from voting for this treaty on the ground that his judgment did not coincide with that of the President upon the advisability of acknowledging the Republic of Panama?

It is the judgment of the President which is to govern in that case, a coordinate branch of this Government. This condition is now presented to us here: There is a Republic of Panama. There is an independent Government there. That Government now presents to us a treaty, and I fail to see how any man can fall back on any excuse that the President's judgment was not well exercised in admitting a representative from Panama after she had gained her independence, after she had expelled from her territory every Colombian soldier.

The second proposition—and I will be brief on it—is this:

Has the President of the United States by any act, since the threatened uprising in Panama up to the present time, failed to follow the precepts of international law or precedents of American policy? It is freely admitted by both sides of this controversy that the President had full knowledge of the fact of the contemplated outbreak in the Province of Panama. There were grave reasons why an outbreak or revolution should be inaugurated. Such revolutions had been inaugurated or started before with much less provocation. It was morally certain that an uprising was about to occur and that the seat of hostilities would be in the vicinity of the transit, which we were expected and which we were in duty bound by our treaty to guard.

Now, Mr. President, having all of this knowledge, was it the duty of the President to take cognizance of that fact and be prepared to guard our property rights, our treaty obligations, and the rights of our citizens in case they were threatened, remembering that the country had acted before to protect such interest and such transit? Was it his duty to have American cruisers in the immediate vicinity?

No matter what view is taken as to the duty of Colombia to protect both the transit and the citizens, did the President do wrong in being prepared to defend either at a moment's notice? If he did, then every President for the last fifty years has committed the same offense. Suppose excesses had occurred there, would he have been held responsible? It would not have been necessary in a German port or a British port or a French port to have had armed cruisers awaiting their domestic broils. The history of these people shows that they are capable of protecting not only the lives of their citizens, but of foreigners also. This is not the condition in our South American Republics.

To-day we have an armed cruiser at Seoul, Korea. War is threatened in the Far East. Every great nation of the world having commercial interests over there, every great nation of the world whose citizens have been in business there and have interests to be protected, anticipating the inability of either Russia or Japan to protect these citizens and these rights, has sent over armed cruisers to the vicinity of this contemplated war. The President has done the same upon South American shores, not only to protect our own citizens, but to be prepared to carry out our treaty obligations. Up to this time, therefore, no charge can be brought against the Administration for its readiness and for the acts that it performed in connection with this uprising.

Mr. President, suppose we accept the proposition that the treaty with New Granada contained no provision which would authorize this Government to interfere with the attempt of Colombia to put down an insurrection, even when the center of that insurrection and the revolutionary forces were in the zone of transit which this Government sought to protect. Still there rises the question which I submit has not yet been answered: What step was taken by the President which ought not to have been taken under the circumstances? There can be no question but what the treaty did authorize this Government to determine for itself what contingencies would authorize it to act in the defense of that transit, and to protect it without being first called upon by the Colombian Government.

The main complaint, however, is lodged against the order given by the head of the Department to one of the commanders of the American vessel to prevent, if possible, the landing of Colombian troops within 50 miles of this transit, anticipating and believing that such landing would in effect obstruct free transit from ocean to ocean. This was not a direction given by the President of the United States to another country, but it was a secret dispatch sent, not by him, but by the head of a Department to the officer under him. And this dispatch, when taken in connection with all the other dispatches from the same Department, shows not an intent on the part of the Navy Department to interfere with the Government of Colombia in attempting to subdue the rebellion in its own territory, but taken in connection with all the other dispatches it shows clearly and only an intent to prevent such hostilities as might endanger the free transit.

Whatever view may be taken as to the expediency of this message, this fact appears: The Colombians did land; they were not prevented from landing; they were not kept a distance of 50 miles; they entered into the zone of transit, and armies of both sides were transferred upon the isthmian railway.

The prohibition in effect went no further than strong efforts on the part of the commanders of our vessels to prevent such acts of war as would endanger the peaceful transit over this line of railway. Four hundred soldiers were there, and without striking a blow they surrendered to a few insurgent policemen. The United States did not ask them to surrender, and it certainly could not compel them to fight.

Not only this, but Colombia herself called upon this country to maintain her sovereignty over that country. That act of itself indicated that she felt unable to protect the transit herself. If it was necessary for her to call upon this Government for aid to put down a Panama revolution, then I want to ask any man on earth if the condition had not arisen which would justify this country in taking the initiative to protect that transit? Colombia acknowledged that she could not protect it; she acknowledged that she could not put down the revolution within her borders.

Mr. President, no self-respecting nation on the face of the earth would ever call in the forces of a foreign country, ask them to land upon her soil and put down a revolution or a rebellion in one of her own provinces, unless she had reached that stage in which she considered that she was unable to do it herself. You have to admit either that the Government of Colombia was not able to put down this rebellion or else that she is not a Government entitled to the respect of any civilized government in the world.

It has even been contended upon this floor that under this treaty the United States was bound to protect or maintain the sovereignty of Colombia over the Isthmus of Panama. I can not believe that any attorney will seriously contend for that proposition. In other words, if that proposition were to be accepted, in addition to what has been said against it here on the floor—and I shall not repeat those arguments—the United States would be authorized under that treaty to revoke or make a new constitution for the Colombian States, containing provisions which they thus far had refused to incorporate as a part of their constitution. The constitution, as I understand, under which Panama became a State of the Colombian Government, called at one time the "United States of Colombia," gave that State and every other State absolute authority to withdraw from the Union whenever they saw fit.

Therefore, if we took the initiative to hold Panama and make her continue a province of the Colombian Government, we would be violating the very constitution under which she was an integral part of that Government,

But it is claimed that the Panama Government could not stand for a moment except it had the moral support of the Government of the United States. Mr. President, she is entitled to our moral support, and if that is all that is necessary for her to make a stand I believe she has such a strong moral support throughout the entire United States that no power of Colombia could ever bring back that Province and make it a part of the Colombian Government.

It is said also that it could not exist unless it was backed by the armies and the Government of the United States. The facts do not justify this conclusion. Estimating the amount of money, as shown in some of the records here, that it required to effect the surrender of 400 Colombian soldiers and their officers to the insurgents, I would say that if they could raise $150,000 they could hold out indefinitely against the whole Colombian Government.

Now, Mr. President, I have reviewed to some extent the conditions which led up to the insurrection; I have referred to all the conditions and messages which bore upon the duty of the President under the Spooner Act, and I have failed entirely to find a point at which the President could have abandoned his efforts to secure the canal without absolutely avoiding the spirit as well as the absolute letter of that law. And I fail to see, Mr. President, after looking over all the corespondence, wherein the Administration could have done otherwise than it did in reference to the Panama revolution.

So we are brought face to face with a simple proposition: Will we carry out the wishes of the American people for a Panama Canal? There is no excuse which can possibly be urged in any manner that will meet this plain proposition. We are not going, and no other country in the world is ever going, to put Panama back into the Colombian jurisdiction and make her a part of that territory. So we have before us the proposition of a splendid treaty that has been secured a hundredfold better than anything we have ever had before. Now, what excuse can we give to the American people for not accepting this proposition so favorable to the Government, and one which this Government has been trying to secure for many long years?

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

Day, late of Company I, Twelfth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, my impression is that this is a case in which the reduction ought not to be made.

Mr. McCUMBER. Shall the report be read?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to have the report read. I have sent for it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Secretary to read the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. McCUMBER on the 1st instant, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1316) granting an increase of pension to George W. Day, have examined the same and report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto appended, is adopted and the passage of the bill is recommended, amended, however, by striking out the word "forty" in line 8 and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty," it being the policy of your committee not to recommend increase beyond that rate to any soldier pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890.

The House report is as follows:

"George W. Day, now 60 years of age, served as a private in Company I, Twelfth Wisconsin Infantry, from November 3, 1861, to July 16, 1865, when honorably discharged.

"He was captured at Rome, Ga., June 3, 1864, and reported at Benton Barracks Mo., April 26, 1865, having been paroled, and was under treatment in January, 1862, for rubeola.

"His claim to pension under the general law, filed in April, 1874, and based upon chronic diarrhea alleged to have been contracted while a prisoner of war, was admitted in 1881 at $2 per month from discharge, and was made to terminate December 23, 1879, upon the ground that the disability had ceased to exist, a certificate of medical examination of that date failing to reveal the existence of chronic diarrhea or any of its effects.

"Claims for restoration to the roll under the general law on account of this disability were rejected, the last one in May, 1898, upon the ground that a pensionable disability from chronic diarrhea had not existed since the soldier's name was dropped from the roll; and a claim for scurvy and results and disease of the liver was also rejected at the same time upon the ground that a disability from these causes had not existed since the filing of the claim.

"He is now pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, at $12 per month for total inability to earn a support by manual labor by reason of rheumatism and paralysis.

"The soldier never filed a claim for pension under the general law on account of rheumatism, but stated in his claim under the act of June 27, 1890, that he contracted such rheumatism while in Cahaba Prison, Alabama, in March, 1865, owing to exposure by lying in the water, the Alabama River having overflown its banks, etc., and filed testimony in the Pension Bureau as to treatment for rheumatism since 1879.

"An affidavit of the beneficiary, filed in the Pension Bureau, sets forth that while in Cahaba prison he suffered from scurvy, chronic diarrhea, and rheumatism; that he had been subject to rheumatism ever since his discharge; that he had been confined to his bed for five months prior to December, 1892; that he was taken down with rheumatism and confined to his bed for three months, not being able to move either hands or feet, and had some one with him as an attendant all the time; that he is now, in December, 1902, unable to go around except by the use of crutches, has no power in his limbs, and is unable to undress himself or attend to calls of nature without assistance.

"There has also been filed the testimony of two comrades, who alleged that they were in Cahaba Prison with the beneficiary, who testified that upon his release from said prison the beneficiary was suffering from rheumatism and scurvy; and the evidence of neighbors and acquaintances that he had been suffering with rheumatism for years and also with scurvy; that since July, 1902, he had been suffering with that disability and paralysis, and had been helpless and confined to his bed; and medical testimony as to treatment for paralysis since July 23, 1902.

"The last medical examination in the case, made on March 4, 1903, upon which the beneficiary was granted a pension of $12 per month under the act of June 27, 1890, describes his physical condition as follows:

"'There is some swelling at the joint of the right knee. Has paralysis, the result of acute multiple neuritis. The affection is present in both hands; the loss of power accompanied by rigidity of the fingers with flexion of middle and ring finger, which are bent in upon palm. The grasp is feeble in both hands, and there is commencing atrophy of the small muscles. Buttons his clothes with difficulty and very slowly. Is about on crutches. There is impairment of coordination. The onset of the attack was gradual and accompanied by pain and helplessness.'

"Pension Bureau papers show that the beneficiary has no means of support aside from his pension except his homestead, worth about $1,200 and encumbered by $750.

"Medical and other testimony filed with your committee shows that the beneficiary is suffering from extensor paralysis affecting both lower and upper extremities; that his hands are so drawn out of shape from the effects of this disease that he is unable to dress or undress without assistance.

"A letter of the adjutant of the George H. Thomas Post, No. 23, Grand Army of the Republic, of Iowa, addressed to the Member who introduced this bill, and also filed with your committee, sets forth that the beneficiary's physical condition is of such a nature to justify Congressional relief; that although the post is opposed to private pension legislation, such legislation, however, was a necessity in his case, it being one of exceptional merit.

"In view of the testimony filed tending to show that the soldier contracted rheumatism while a prisoner of war, and taking into consideration that he requires the aid of a second person, that he rendered faithful service for nearly four years, and is destitute, an increase of his pension to $40 per month is justified.

"The passage of the bill is therefore recommended."

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to say to the Senator from Iowa that in granting pensions where the soldier is totally disabled from performing any labor, is wholly unable to do anything himself and is in destitute circumstances, $30 is the maximum allowed by the Senate Committee on Pensions. That amount is only increased when the disability of the soldier is such that he requires the constant or nearly constant attendance of a third person to take care of him, and then an amount beyond the $30 is allowed sufficient to pay a reasonable compensation for the care that is given him.

In this case the record discloses simply that he has paralysis; that he gets around on crutches; that he needs some assistance in buttoning his clothes in dressing. The record does not disclose, as I read it, that he requires any further assistance. And following the rule which is applied in all cases, it seemed to your committee that we could not take this one case out of the general rule without doing injustice to many others who are similarly situated.

I hope the Senator from Iowa will see his way clear to coincide with this salutary rule on the part of the Senate committee.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I think the rule stated is a very salutary one, but in this case I am informed by resolutions of the Grand Army post that the situation of the claimant is that of entire helplessness; that his condition is one of total paralysis or practically so, and, in my opinion, he should come within the exception which has been so well stated by the Senator from North Dakota.

The medical examination of 1903, about a year ago, distinctly states that the onset of this attack of paralysis was gradual, accompanied by pain and helplessness. I am informed that the condition of the claimant now is one of total helplessness. It is a case which appeals very strongly to my sympathy, and I should think it would come within the exception.

Mr. McCUMBER. I suggest, if it be agreeable to the Senator from Iowa, that if he has further evidence in this case than that which was presented to the committee, as we adopted simply the House report as to the conditions, we pass the bill over at the present time, and I shall be very glad to consider any further testimony which may be adduced.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment will be disagreed to. This is a soldier who is almost totally blind, as well as having other disabilities of a very serious nature. A medical examination rated him at $42 per month. The report of the committee says:

Evidence of his physicians and neighbors shows that he is almost totally blind, and his general condition such that he is wholly incapacitated for manual labor or for earning a support.

Evidence accompanying the bill shows claimant to be financially poor and in need of relief. He has an invalid wife to support and has no means except his pension. It is very probable that his blindness is the result of his military service, and your committee are of opinion that his claim is a worthy one for action by Congress.

If it could have been completely established that his blindness was due to his military service he would be receiving $72 per month. That was impossible to establish, but there are such equities in this case, Mr. President, that it seems to me the bill ought not to be amended. I have noticed that we passed several bills of a somewhat similar nature to-day at $30 per month—some of them House bills—and in one or two cases the soldier was pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, so that he did not have to prove any disability of service origin.

I know of this man, Mr. President; I know that he is in an extremely bad condition, and I trust the chairman of the committee will agree to have the amendment disagreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Inasmuch as I have not had an opportunity to look the matter over carefully, I ask the Senator to allow the amendment to be agreed to at the present time, and I will consider the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I prefer that it may be acted on now one way or the other.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—CONNELL VS. HOWELL.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now take up the election case of Connell against Howell, and I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASSEL].

Mr. MCLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire how the time stands?

The SPEAKER. The time so far has been evenly divided with the exception of one minute.

Mr. MCLAIN. How much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER. Two hours and fifty-five minutes, to be equally divided to-day.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASSEL] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, the contested-election case of Connell versus Howell is one which has been given very careful consideration by Elections Committee No. 3, and the results of that investigation have been very fully given to this House by the chairman of the committee.

I want to say, however, that in my judgment this is a case in which both contestant and contestee are thoroughly honest and upright men, and I do not think that anyone in the investigation has accused the contestee of being a party to any irregularities that may have occurred at the time of his election, and he has been very fair and manly in his statements in reference to the case, stating frankly and openly that unless he was given a fair and honest majority of all votes cast at the election he did not wish to retain his seat.

It was with this idea in my mind that I went into the investigation with the other members of the committee, with the results as stated in our report, although personally I would have favored a report showing a larger majority for Mr. Connell, as I am convinced that under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania there were many illegal votes cast that should have been deducted from the votes reported for Mr. Howell.

The results have been brought about by the very strong partisan feelings on the part of many of the election boards who held this election. The laws of Pennsylvania have been made to insure an honest election and a strictly secret ballot. As a member of the Pennsylvania legislature I have helped to pass a number of these laws, and it has been and is the aim of that State to protect its elections and to have honest returns.

The qualifications of a voter in Pennsylvania are: Residence, a small tax, and American citizenship. Our residence clause states that a man must live within the State one year, and must have been registered in the district at least sixty days before the election, at which time a poll tax is levied against him. If he is a single man this poll tax is 50 cents, and if a married man the poll tax is 25 cents. By the payment of this amount of tax a man is entitled to vote for a period of two years, but the tax must be paid thirty days before the election at which he intends to vote. This tax had become a source through which votes could be purchased by the heads of certain organizations buying up these poll taxes, and in this way keeping a man from his vote unless he voted with the organization holding these tax receipts. In order to overcome this the legislature of Pennsylvania passed a law which reads as follows:

PAYMENT OF TAX.

SECTION 1. That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to pay or cause to be paid any occupation or poll tax assessed against any elector, except on written and signed order of such elector authorizing such payments to be made, which written and signed order must be presented at least thirty days prior to the date at which such elector desires to vote.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any officer, clerk, or other person authorized to collect taxes and receipt therefor to receive payment of or receipt for any occupation or poll tax assessed for State or county purposes from any person other than the elector, except upon his written and signed order authorizing such payments to be made.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to vote or attempt to vote at any election upon a tax receipt obtained in violation of this act. (Act of 15th July, 1897, P. L., 276.)

There is no question but what thousands of votes were cast in Lackawanna County in the election of November 4, 1902, the voters of which were not entitled to a vote because this tax was not paid. If the legislature of Pennsylvania had the right to make a qualification of this kind, then these votes were illegal and should be excluded from the returns.

The law of our State also gives citizens the privilege of voting in case their names are left off the registration list, provided they can prove at the polls that they are entitled to a vote. In this district there were between 400 and 500 affidavits filed which were defective. Some of them were not even signed by the voter, others were filled up partially, but many blanks were left unfilled, and consequently I think all these votes should be deducted from the results.

The testimony has been taken of competent witnesses which goes to prove that a large number of these votes were cast for Mr. Howell, and, being illegal, should be deducted from the vote given to him in the returns.

One of the greatest wrongs, however, in the whole proceeding was the voting of a great many unnaturalized foreigners. Pennsylvania has been one of the greatest States in the Union for receiving into its borders people from all the nations on the face of the earth. It has been its pleasure to make many of the best citizens of our country out of these foreign-born people; but our State is very jealous of its citizenship, and I think that the Congress of the United States should throw around the naturalization law still greater restrictions. To be an American citizen is one of the greatest honors which a man can have, and for us to give this citizenship to foreign-born people without character, education, or principle, and who have no knowledge of the laws of our country, who have no interest in the broad ideas of liberty which have been established in the minds of our own children, is a great mistake, and our own people will soon lose the great honor which they have for their citizenship if we continue to lower the standard of this citizenship as we have in the past.

There were many of this class of men who voted at the election in Lackawanna County in November, 1902, who had not even taken out their declaration of becoming citizens. They had no papers of any kind to show citizenship, and yet the election officers, partisans and all belonging to one party, in many cases allowed them to vote, and in some instances sent for them to come and vote, knowing they were not entitled to the privilege.

Mr. Speaker, in the argument made yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] in reference to the majority given at the election in November, 1902, for Mr. Pattison, candidate for governor, and comparing it with the majority given for Mr. Howell, he asked the question why the difference in votes.

This question, in my mind, is a very simple one, and has been explained in the testimony given to us in the report. The Democrats of Lackawanna County are very much like the Democrats throughout the rest of the United States. They are united on local issues, but divided on national issues and platforms.

It has been shown to us here very plainly that a large proportion of the Democrats of Lackawanna County in convention nominated Mr. Connell as their candidate for Congress. It has also been shown that the minority, a part of the Democratic party, withdrew from that convention and nominated Mr. Howell for the same office. This matter was taken before the State courts at Harrisburg, and in their rulings both names were removed from the ballot. Consequently Mr. Howell was placed in nomination by nomination papers, and Mr. Connell was placed in nomination by the Republican party and also by nomination papers. The Democratic party was divided on this issue and, while they were united in their support for governor of Pennsylvania, it divided their vote when it came to ballot for a Member of Congress.

Consequently it explains to us very plainly why the difference in votes was occasioned. There was a great deal of talk here yesterday in reference to the throwing out of the three wards—one in Old Forge and two in Winton. I want to say that there are five wards in the borough of Dunmore that, according to the testimony, should have been rejected and thrown out of this count. Mr. Howell's majority in these five wards was 164 votes. His majority in the three wards which were thrown out was 453 votes, so that without putting into the record any votes except from these eight districts Mr. Connell's majority would have been 158 votes. But there has been given to us in the record, fully and plainly, the testimony, as has been stated here, of 6,500 witnesses. Many of these have not been pertinent to the issue, but the witnesses that have been pertinent to the issue have been named in the brief presented by the contestant.

He has named the parties, he has referred to their testimony by page, and to their politics by page as well, and this House has before it in this report a full and complete statement of each of these illegal voters and, as near as possible, as to how each voted. We find in this that there were 386 disqualified for the reason that they did not make legal proof sufficient to warrant them in voting. There were 379 votes cast of nonnaturalized persons. Every one of these men appeared upon the witness stand and stated that they were not naturalized, and that they had voted for Congressman on this day in November, 1902. There were 875 who voted who testified themselves that they had not paid a tax within two years, the limit of time which is required to pay a tax in the State of Pennsylvania. This is their own testimony, not that of hearsay.

Mr. BENNY. Did these 379 witnesses the gentleman speaks of testify for whom they voted on that day?

Mr. CASSEL. The majority of them did not.

Mr. BENNY. Were they asked the question?

Mr. CASSEL. They were not. As was stated here yesterday, both counsel for the contestee and the contestant stated that it was not necessary for them to answer that question, but their politics was proven plainly by the associations which they kept, by the people who brought them there and voted them, by the people who marked their tickets, by the people who urged them to come down to vote, and who stated openly for whom they were voting and working on that day.

Mr. BENNY. Do I understand that the gentleman has deducted these 379 from Mr. Howell's total count?

Mr. CASSEL. We have not in the report of the majority, but in the statement that I wish to make before I close I will state that I have deducted 379 votes, in order to prove what I believe should have been Mr. Connell's majority, amounting to 2,394, instead of 223 as shown by the majority report. There were 151 votes proven of nonresidents; there were 172 voters who had received illegal assistance; there were 92 people whose names are on the register list as having voted, but who swore themselves that they were not present on that day and did not vote at that election. These make in all 1,707 votes outside of the illegal affidavits of persons who are reported as having voted on that day and whose votes were illegal. The matter of the admission of these votes of course has been left to that part of the committee composed of lawyers. My ideas of the results of this election are as follows:

According to the official returns, Mr. Connell received 13,139 votes. Mr. Howell received 13,600 votes. The Second and Third wards of Winton, the first district of Old Forge, and the five wards of Dunmore should be thrown out. This would deduct from Mr. Connell's vote 488 votes and from Mr. Howell's vote 1,105, which would leave Mr. Connell a total of 12,651 and Mr. Howell a total of 12,495. But to this must be added the 32 votes which have been proven for Mr. Connell, which would make his vote 12,683; and from Mr. Howell's vote we must deduct these illegal votes which have been proven by good testimony, as I believe, 2,206, leaving him a total of 10,289. This would give a majority of 2,394 for Mr. Connell. I believe these figures to be as nearly correct as they can be had from this great mass of testimony which has been brought before our committee, and I think that Mr. Connell's majority is not only what has been stated by the majority report, but it should be a great many more, as I have shown.

I might go further into an explanation of the election laws of the State of Pennsylvania. They are simple, and yet supposed to be entirely fair. The judge and inspectors of election are elected by the people. We have one judge and two inspectors, who are chosen in February of each year, and each voter can vote for but one inspector, thus generally giving the minority one inspector. These inspectors each then appoint a clerk, and the board consists of these five men.

There appears to be a misunderstanding in reference to the registration book in the hands of the election officers on the day of election. The law is very plain when it says that the county commissioners shall make up a check list from the registration book, and this shall be placed in the hands of the inspectors of election, and they shall mark opposite the names of the voters when the ballots are cast by them. The original registration book is not placed in the hands of the officers. Any names not found in these check lists in the hands of the inspectors, or any names under which any disqualifications are marked, of course, are not entitled to a vote unless affidavits are filed showing they are citizens and residents of the district.

As I have said before, the trouble in the districts in question appears to have been due to the fact that the officers in these districts were apparently strong partisans, and determined to bring about results without reference to justice or law. [Applause.]

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHIRAS].

Mr. SHIRAS. Mr. Speaker, I have examined the majority and minority reports in this case. I have also looked over the evidence that was considered material, and I consulted at a considerable length of time with the majority of the members that composed the Republican majority in this committee. Notwithstanding the consideration given to the report of the majority, I find I am unable to agree in the recommendations made by my party colleagues. In the first place, permit me to say that I do not question for an instant the sincerity of the gentlemen who compose the majority of this committee. Anyone who listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIRDSALL] and the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL], must be impressed with the fact that these men believe they are right.

They are also to be credited with the fact that they had to deal with one of the most difficult cases in point of extent of testimony and number of witnesses of any case that has been presented here for years.

Now, I do not question their sincerity; and, under ordinary circumstances, I take it, it is the duty of Members of this House to follow the suggestions and recommendations made by the majority of the committee that has examined a case of this kind. While, therefore, I do not question the sincerity of my fellow-members who wrote this majority report, neither do I question very seriously their judgment up to a certain point. When you come to examine the majority report down to a certain point, it will be found they were substantially right, but when they become impregnated with the germs of "aliundeism" they seem to act, as it appears to me, with utter disregard to the law that should control in a case of this kind.

In a few moments I shall refer briefly to the question of aliunde evidence; but before touching upon that point I want to say to my Republican colleagues that this is admittedly a close case from the standpoint of the majority. There are 6,500 witnesses and 2,500 pages of testimony, and doubtless thousands and tens of thousands of dollars were spent in preparing this issue for this body to consider. And what was the result? The majority find a plurality of 223 votes in favor of the contestant out of a total of 28,000 votes cast in that district. They have taken the position, necessarily, that if there had been a change of 112 votes in that district Mr. Connell—the contestant—would have been defeated.

Now, gentlemen, you must remember that while that is conceded by the majority of the committee representing this side of the House, the Democrats do not concede that the result was so close. You must take the situation as it existed there; and there are equities in the case that seem to me to throw a great deal of light on the situation. In the first place, we are told that we ought to follow the majority of the committee because of the great volume of testimony taken. Now, gentlemen, let me tell you those are wooden guns piled up there. If you have listened to the debate up to the present time you must have been satisfied of the fact that the case rests upon a very few pages of testimony and several very simple propositions of law.

The testimony relied upon here is substantially quoted in the minority report. If any Member will take the two reports and go off quietly by himself for an hour and analyze this case, he will come to a conclusion without the necessity of looking into the testimony further; or if he has listened to the debate of yesterday, he must in the same way have reached a conclusion as to how he should vote.

Now, the idea of any Republican here trying to hide behind that mass of testimony, and saying, "I am unable to delve into all the depths of this case and come to a conclusion, and I can satisfy my conscience by following the lead of this committee," is, it seems to me, fallacious. Some gentlemen on this side undertake to throw the responsibility on the committee in that way. They say: "I believe the members of the committee to be honest, conscientious men. They have gone through this mass of testimony, and we can not do better, under the circumstances, than follow their conclusion."

On that point I wish your attention. The determination of this case does not require the consideration of the testimony to any great extent. The testimony upon which the issue here turns has been repeatedly read and referred to on both sides of the House.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman mean to say that all the material evidence has been read?

Mr. SHIRAS. All the material evidence, the evidence that you rely upon, has been mentioned, its character analyzed and presented to the House.

Mr. DRISCOLL. We could not do that in a week.

Mr. SHIRAS. When you come to consider the questions of law involved here, if you are inclined to give due weight to those questions, nine-tenths of this testimony must be ruled out absolutely.

Mr. CASSEL. Has the gentleman read the briefs of the contestant and contestee in this case?

Mr. SHIRAS. I have read the report very carefully three or four times and have consulted with practically every member of the majority of the committee except Mr. DRISCOLL, whom I tried to see several times. I say the report——

Mr. CASSEL. I am speaking of the briefs which set forth the case as presented by the two committees.

Mr. SHIRAS. As I have already said, I have not attempted to read all the testimony in the case, because I have taken the word of the majority as well as the minority of the committee that the material evidence on which they rely has been presented.

I think it can be shown that the great mass of this testimony must be ruled out, not only because it comes under the head of aliunde proof, but because this aliunde evidence can not be applied owing to the failure to connect it up with the votes thrown out; and when you come to consider the matter, therefore, it will be found that four or five thousand pages of this testimony can not properly be considered.

Now, let us look at another feature of this case. The Tenth district of Pennsylvania in 1902 was Democratic. The Democratic candidate for governor carried it by some five or six thousand majority; and before the election every Republican who knew anything about the state of the case in that district knew that there was very little question that the Democratic Congressional candidate would carry that district, although ordinarily a Republican district.

Consequently, the Democrats knowing this, and knowing that they had more than a fighting chance, there was every reason in the world why they should put forward a representative Democrat to lead them to the victory which would surely come to them in that district when the votes were cast in 1902.

Mr. GILBERT. What were the changed conditions that led people to think it would go Democratic?

Mr. SHIRAS. There was a series of labor strikes growing out of the coal business there, and Mr. Connell was one of the leading coal operators, and it was natural under those conditions to expect reprisals.

The county of Lackawanna gave the Democratic candidate for governor between five and six thousand majority. Now, the Democrats, knowing that this was coming, saw their duty, and they therefore expected to nominate a Democratic candidate, because in that ordinarily Republican district they expected to elect their candidate.

Now, what happened? The kind friends of the contestant went into a Democratic convention, disrupted it, and, with a very small minority of the convention apparently, got the Democratic nomination. Although he is coming here to-day charging fraud against the Democracy, he received and filed a Democratic certificate of nomination in Dauphin County. Mr. Howell, who had the majority of the convention, also received a Democratic nomination, and that was filed in Dauphin County. A contest arose, and the courts of Pennsylvania decided that the nomination given to Mr. Connell was illegal and threw him off the Democratic ticket.

Mr. SWANSON. Do you mean he claimed to be the Democratic nominee?

Mr. SHIRAS. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. What proportion of that convention voted for Mr. Connell?

Mr. OLMSTED. Will my colleague permit a question?

Mr. SHIRAS. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. What proportion of the Democrats in that convention——

Mr. SHIRAS. I have yielded to my colleague, Mr. OLMSTED.

Mr. OLMSTED. I understood you to find fault with the Democratic convention for nominating or attempting to nominate a Republican.

Mr. GILBERT. As a Democrat.

Mr. SHIRAS. I say Mr. Connell went to a Democratic convention and was nominated.

Mr. OLMSTED. Let me ask my colleague if he himself was not nominated by a Democratic organization?

Mr. SHIRAS. Yes, and the three other Republican Congressmen in Allegheny County also received Citizens' nominations. Mr. DALZELL himself received a Citizens' nomination, although he did not receive a Democratic nomination.

Mr. OLMSTED. Did you receive Democratic support and were you elected in that way against the regular Republican nominee? Is not that the fact?

Mr. SHIRAS. That is not the fact, sir, as stated. I ran as an avowed Republican, and, as is often the case, received several party nominations.

Mr. KLUTTZ. The Democrats did not vote for you, did they?

Mr. OLMSTED. A good many of them did. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHIRAS. As this matter is becoming a little personal, perhaps I had better refer briefly to the political situation in Allegheny County. We have not any Democratic party in Allegheny County practically, for they have joined in the fight for good government; we have two Republican parties there. If the Democrats had run a Democratic candidate in my district against two Republicans, he would not receive probably more than 4,000 votes out of the 30,000 votes cast.

Mr. CONNELL. To which party do you belong?

Mr. SHIRAS. When the vote was taken there I had 14,500 votes; the other Republican had about 14,500 votes, so there was but a very small difference between the two, but the vote that was cast there for me represented the untrammeled, nonoffice-holding vote in my district. I think I got practically every fair-minded, untrammeled Republican vote in that district in that particular contest. [Laughter.] I will tell you why I think so.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then there are 14,500 trammeled Republicans in that district? [Laughter.]

Mr. SHIRAS. No; but there are thousands of officeholders in that district, Federal, State, and county [laughter], and two or three thousand relatives. Now, I got few of those votes.

Mr. CASSEL. What was the majority in that district?

Mr. SHIRAS. The majority in that district was 18.

Mr. CASSEL. What has become of the parties that nominated you at that time? Have not they gone back into the Republican party?

Mr. SHIRAS. I am not going back into the pedigree of Allegheny County politics. No one can understand them, and I can not expect the gentleman to understand them.

Mr. GILBERT. There is no contest about your seat.

Mr. SHIRAS. The gentleman refers to the 18 majority as apparently indicating that I did not represent the Republicans in my district, intimating that if I did I would have had a larger majority.

Mr. OLMSTED. No; I think it simply shows that you have become one the 6,000 officeholders. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHIRAS. You look at it from a different point of view. Now let me tell you gentlemen about that district. My Republican opponent ran on the "organization" Republican ticket, on the same ticket as Governor Pennypacker, on the so-called "straight Republican ticket." Governor Pennypacker carried the Twenty-ninth Congressional district by 20,000 majority, and my Republican opponent was not elected. Did the Democrats do that? My opponent ran 20,000 votes behind the Republican State ticket in this Congressional district. Could he have been more badly defeated?

Mr. KENNEDY. The same thing occurred over in Lackawanna, did it not?

Mr. SHIRAS. I am being diverted from what I was saying.

Mr. GILBERT. Now will the gentleman answer my question? What proportion of the Democrats in the convention in this Congressional district were in favor of the nomination of Mr. Connell as the Democratic nominee?

Mr. THAYER. Thirty-two out of 192.

Mr. SHIRAS. Now, gentlemen, you do not want to hear me on what the Democrats of Allegheny County could, would, or should have done, or my political pedigree, but it is simply a question of fact, "Who was elected?" and you can not see who has been elected, for the Committee on Elections have so limited the inquiry that not over fifteen of the witnesses whose testimony was taken is material to this issue.

Mr. SIBLEY. Let me call your attention——

Mr. SHIRAS. Let me give the reason, because I do not want to make a statement and then have to analyze it before I go on. I started to say that the result of this Democratic convention was that not only was Mr. Connell's nomination thrown off the Democratic ticket, but Mr. Howell, the admitted Democrat, who positively was a Democrat and whom the Democrats knew had a chance of election, was also thrown off the Democratic ticket.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAIN. I will yield the gentleman ten minutes more if he desires it.

Mr. SHIRAS. The controversy that arose in this Democratic convention, in which the contestant desired to carry off the prize, is not material, or ought not to be, except for one phase. Everyone here who is candid will admit that if Mr. Howell had been before his district on the straight Democratic ticket, it would have given him four to five thousand Democratic majority, and he would have certainly gotten it but for the extraordinary and peculiar methods of procedure of that Democratic convention.

Therefore I say, gentlemen, the question in this controversy is as to the alleged Democratic convention, with a Republican candidate, and an actual Democratic candidate. I take it that all Republican Members here who are in favor of fair play well know that Mr. Howell got 461 majority, instead of the 4,000 or 5,000 he ordinarily would have had. It is difficult for this committee to show that all these votes were intentionally fraudulent. I take the position that in the consideration of this case there is no doubt that the committee has failed to fully understand the subsequent effect of this Democratic convention when figuring upon the majority that Howell would have had.

Mr. CASSEL. Do you mean to say that the committee, which has given two weeks' continuous work in going over this evidence and testimony, four weeks almost, commencing at 10 o'clock in the morning and continuing until 5 o'clock, and giving through their report their conclusions that they have arrived at, that they do not know more of it than you, when you say that you have not been able even to read it?

Mr. SHIRAS. I have been trying to get to the very proposition, because the bulk, perhaps, of this testimony, showing what you did, is what has led up to my general proposition, viz, whether you have established the fact of Mr. Connell being entitled to a seat under this evidence. Now, what do you do? You find 461 plurality in favor of the Democratic candidate, and you change that to 223 in favor of the contestant. How do you do that? Up to a certain point the committee did not go astray. It showed, I think, good judgment when it took up the case of these three precincts, which they charged to have been, on their face, full of fraud. To take these up and with careful judgment proceed to determine how they would get at the fraud and what effect the fraud had on the general result.

But they did not treat it fairly. In the first place, they found 50 illegal votes of persons who had not paid their taxes, 50 illegal votes of persons who had not registered, and those, to some extent, were technically illegal votes, but instead of taking those votes out of Old Forge and the Second and Third wards of Winton, and even charging all against Mr. Howell, what did they do? They threw out the entire 797 votes, though Mr. Howell had 454 majority.

Mr. McLAIN. May the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment just to say I will allow him as much time as he wants and he can proceed as he desires.

Mr. SHIRAS. Now, that, gentlemen, is the starting point of this case. Here are districts that cast 797 votes that gave Mr. Howell 625 votes and 172 to the contestant, and an admission that part of these were technically illegal ballots and not fraudulent in the worst sense. They threw out those 797 votes, and they do not show in the evidence taken in Old Forge and in the Second and Third wards of Winton that any single one—mark me—that a single one of those fraudulent votes had been cast for Mr. Howell, but, on the contrary, the only evidence of illegal votes cast was that they were cast for the contestant. Is that not correct, I ask the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SWANSON. You mean that there was no fraud on the ballot box?

Mr. SHIRAS. I say in the proof they did not attempt to prove any of those illegal votes had been cast for Mr. Howell.

Mr. SWANSON. They were simply people who voted not being properly registered.

Mr. SHIRAS. There may have been false impersonations, there may have been cases of extreme frauds, but I am not defending that; I am analyzing how they got at the question of the separate fraudulent votes or assumed illegal votes——

Mr. GILBERT. They cast that vote to Mr. Howell without any proof——

Mr. SHIRAS. They found nothing, in my judgment, which should lead to the throwing out of the entire precincts. The result of that was that Mr. Howell still had 8 majority and then they went back and by aliunde proof—here is the dangerous point in their process, by aliunde proof—they found that 32 of those 797 votes had been cast for Mr. Connell. Now, what was the result, gentlemen, of that finding? It was this: Here were three precincts with 797 votes and with the large majority of 454 for Mr. Howell which were absolutely thrown out. They destroyed this entire vote, yet found Mr. Howell elected by 8 majority. They then go back and go over the embers, you might say, of the destroyed votes and find 32 for Mr. Connell, and turn that Democratic district, which gave 454 majority for Mr. Howell, over to Mr. Connell by a unanimous vote—32 for Connell, nothing for Howell. It seems incredible.

Mr. SWANSON. Which gave that majority?

Mr. SHIRAS. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHIRAS. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is not that the ordinary practice, that when a district or poll is thrown out for fraud, to go back and prove votes cast for both parties by evidence aliunde? Was that not done in the Fifty-fifth Congress in the case of Wise v. Young and in many other cases?

Mr. SHIRAS. I do not think it was ever done under conditions as they existed in this case.

Mr. DRISCOLL. No two conditions in elections are exactly alike, but where we throw out votes of certain districts because of fraud, the practice for both parties is to go back and prove the votes cast for their candidates aliunde.

Mr. SHIRAS. Now, I want to ask a question in return. Is it not a fact that those three districts cast 797 votes, which gave Mr. Howell a majority of 454 votes, and by throwing out those precincts it still left a majority of 8, and that the action of the committee in finding those 32 votes put the result in favor of Mr. Connell?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why, yes, but—— [Applause on the Democratic side.] Oh, there is nothing to cheer about this; we are dealing in facts here. We stated it yesterday ourselves, and it is not necessary for a Mugwump from Pennsylvania to state it over again. I simply say, is it not the invariable rule? Did not Mr. Howell have the same chance to go back and prove his votes in those districts? Did he not have the same opportunity to prove them if he wanted to?

Mr. SHIRAS. Now, gentlemen, I am trying to talk about the equities in this case.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHIRAS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. In your judgment, was the committee justified in throwing out the three precincts? Do you agree with them in that?

Mr. SHIRAS. I do not agree with them on that point. I do not criticise them very harshly, but I do not agree with them. What I think they ought to have done is, having found about 125 irregular votes, some technically irregular and some absolutely fraudulent, they should have deducted those votes, even if they deducted them all from Howell. That would have been bad enough, but to throw them all out was unfair, in my judgment.

Mr. CASSEL. In the report of the Second Ward of Winton, 184 votes were cast for Howell and 178 votes were declared and proved fraudulent.

Mr. SHIRAS. Who found them fraudulent?

Mr. CASSEL. They were shown to be fraudulent by the evidence.

Mr. SHIRAS. Now, we find the case stands in this way. That when they took the disputed districts this great number of votes, amounting to nearly 800, were thrown out of the three precincts, making a unanimous vote for Connell of 32 to nothing. That, if sustained, would elect Connell by 24 majority. Now, that does not look like much of a plurality to come into the House here with, with thousands of pages of testimony at an expense of thousands of dollars, showing only a plurality of 24. Well, what does the committee do? They had a taste of "aliundeism," and they then did what, to my mind, is the one illegal proposition that bars out most of this testimony. The testimony was taken showing that 1,700 illegal votes were cast; yes, upward of 2,000. If I am incorrect I wish the chairman would correct me——

Mr. DRISCOLL. Two thousand and two.

Mr. SHIRAS. Two thousand and two; and when the committee came to consider these votes they were of the opinion that there were a number of fraudulent votes, and under aliunde proof they attempted to show that a great number had been cast for Mr. Howell, and thousands and thousands of pages of testimony were taken upon that branch of the case. I do not say it was wrong to take the testimony upon that point, but I say that when the committee came to make the report they really barred out the testimony and have prevented its consideration by the House. They found, I repeat, that there were 1,700 illegal votes; and what did they do? They file a report in which they say that "at least 200 votes"—that is the language of the report—"at least 200" of these votes were cast for Howell.

When they came to make the report, you find that in round numbers they deduct 200 from Howell. Let me show you what that means. Upon an investigation of the attitude of the members of the committee we find that they can not tell who the various parties were, what their names were, or where they were located. Is this not most extraordinary? In my mind it is the turning point in this case. Not only we as Republicans can not know, but the opposition are powerless to pass upon the two questions that arise in each of these 200 cases: Was the vote illegal, and was it cast for Mr. Howell? It is the introduction of this bad precedent that arouses in the main my opposition.

Thus, having agreed that there were 1,700 illegal votes, and believing that "at least 200" of them were cast for Mr. Howell, they promptly charge them up and take from his count 200 votes that are not identified by name or voting precinct.

Mr. KENNEDY. Why, they were passed upon by the majority of the committee.

Mr. SHIRAS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman mean to say that his committee passed upon these 200 votes and has got them entered on the record, in the minutes, as 200 voters from certain precincts? And by a vote of the committee determined that they were illegal?

Mr. KENNEDY. The committee passed upon 200. In my judgment there are a thousand.

Mr. SHIRAS. Now, I want to ask the gentleman how he passed on those 200. Where are they? What are their names? Why does the committee not have them in its report?

Mr. KENNEDY. I did not draw the report.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The committee did not pass on the 200.

Mr. SHIRAS. I am not saying there were not 200 illegal votes there. I am not saying that they ought not to be deducted, if you can prove them, but I say you have to do it in a legal way. Let me say to the members of the majority of this committee that when they had a vote that they wanted to deduct from Mr. Howell's count, one of the gentlemen should have said, "Mr. Chairman, I move you that the vote of John Smith, illegal by false registration or nonpayment of taxes, which vote the evidence shows has been cast for Mr. Howell, shall be deducted from his count." That should have been put to a vote of the entire committee, and if the committee affirmatively by its majority struck that out, the Republicans and Democrats voting upon it, then that vote should have been taken from the count of Mr. Howell.

But what have you done? You have simply come to the conclusion—all of you, as individuals—that there were "at least 200" illegal votes out of 1,700 that were cast for Mr. Howell, and you have deducted them without identifying them by the name of the voter or voting precinct, a thing I never heard of, even in the "solid South." Now, unless the members of this committee can deny what I say here—that they have taken 200 votes that they can not identify—it seems to me that it shows the dangerous character of the aliunde evidence, and it is upon that that this gentleman [pointing] relies for obtaining his seat.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, let me answer that just here. First, the members of the minority say that these questions were not discussed by the majority who signed this report. The majority report was signed by the majority members of this committee, and it was not submitted to the minority. We passed a resolution by vote of the committee stating that we thought that Mr. Connell was entitled to his seat. The majority then prepared this report and signed it.

Mr. SHIRAS. Let me ask the gentleman a question——

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman let me make a statement right here? I do not want to take any of his time.

Mr. SHIRAS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON. The majority of the committee furnished the minority of the committee the names of the thirty-two voters whose testimony was established by aliunde evidence. We are able to examine them and see for ourselves whether there is anything upon which to base it. They do not furnish us any of the list of the 200 men that they say illegally voted for Mr. Howell, and we can not examine that, and the House can not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask right here the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Is it true that the majority furnished the minority those thirty-two names? Is it not true that I asked one member to furnish the names that he had examined to the rest of us, and also to the members of the minority?

Mr. JOHNSON. May I make another statement?

Mr. SHIRAS. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL].

Mr. JOHNSON. May I answer the gentleman's question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHIRAS. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON. The majority of the committee divided up this work. That is the reason they do not know any more about it. One man examined one part of the record and another man another. I examined all of it. That is the difference. [Laughter.] One member of the committee who made up the list of the 32 aliunde votes handed that list to the ranking member of the minority of the committee, and the majority of the committee adopted his work.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Let me ask this question, Is there any evidence in the record showing that the 200 votes thus thrown out were cast for Mr. Howell?

Mr. JOHNSON. We do not know whose votes those 200 were; the names are not given.

Mr. SHIRAS. Now, I should like to make this reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASSEL]. He having admitted that he and his five colleagues on the committee passed upon these 200 votes; suppose that on the question of charging up those votes for Mr. Howell or taking them away from him there had been a division among those six members of the committee; suppose the vote had been 4 to 2, then, if the Democratic members had come in and voted on that question, that vote would not have been thrown out.

In other words, there was only a majority of a majority voting upon that question of striking out these votes. The result is that the committee itself does not know what those 200 votes represent. They could not agree and have not agreed on that point. Those votes are simply floating in the air, without name or habitation. No one can identify those voters. No member of the committee or anyone else can do so.

Mr. CASSEL. I believe that I speak truthfully when I say that at least four of the six members of the majority of the committee, after having gone over the testimony in the case name by name and man by man, comparing the testimony on the one side and on the other, were in favor of putting into this report anywhere from 500 to 1,000 of those people.

Mr. SHIRAS. It would not have been any worse if you had done so.

Mr. CASSEL. We were satisfied, and supposed the majority of the committee would be.

Mr. SHIRAS. I am simply asking for fair play in this matter. I say that unless you show whose votes those 200 were, they ought not to be thrown out. It seems to me this is only ordinary fair play.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask one more question—that is all?

Mr. SHIRAS. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If those three districts—the Second and Third wards of Winton and the first district of Old Forge—are thrown out, how does that leave the vote?

Mr. SHIRAS. It leaves the vote 8 in favor of Mr. Howell.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Now, is it not true that Mr. Howell did not try to prove aliunde any of the votes cast for him or any of the illegal votes alleged to have been cast for Mr. Connell? That is true, is it not?

Mr. SHIRAS. I will make a practical answer to that question in this way: It was competent, perhaps, for Mr. Howell to prove by aliunde testimony the whole 2,000 votes, and it would have cost him $10,000 or $15,000. That sort of proceeding on the other side cost the contestant probably $50,000. Such a contest of "aliundeism" would be a farce, and the prize would go to the biggest purse.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If you have read the evidence, have you any doubt that at least, we will say, 10 illegal votes, because that number would be sufficient, were shown by evidence aliunde but competent to have been cast for Mr. Howell? Have you any doubt about that?

Mr. SHIRAS. I did not quite catch the purport of the gentleman's question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is there not aliunde evidence sufficient to show that at least 10 of these illegal votes were cast for Mr. Howell?

Mr. SHIRAS. I do not think so, upon the evidence.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Have you examined it?

Mr. SHIRAS. I have examined the testimony on which the supporters of the contestant rely.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You have not read it fully; you have not read the whole of it.

Mr. SHIRAS. But you have not identified the voters. That is the reason I say that this evidence should have been barred out.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Has the gentleman any doubt that at least 20 of those votes were cast for Mr. Howell?

Mr. SHIRAS. Not the least.

Now, I want to call attention to another point. In these disputed districts only 32 votes have been proved for Mr. Connell, where 172 are returned. Were the rest of the votes returned for Mr. Connell legal or illegal? Unless this question is determined, it seems to me you have not proved anything. The danger that arises in a case of this kind is clearly shown in respect to these 200 votes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken more time than I expected. This is simply a question of asking for fair play. I do not believe it right to delegate our consciences in a close case like this to the committee and allow them to determine the whole question of law and of fact. I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that it is unfair to the sitting Member, unfair to the Tenth Congressional district, unfair to the State of Pennsylvania, and unfair to the Republican party to unseat Mr. Howell. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] for forty minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, in rising to discuss the question in this contested-election case, I consider myself fortunate that I am surrounded by men trained in the law, who know generally the elementary rules of law. I shall, therefore, use none of my time in attempting to supplement the very able presentation of the law applicable made by my colleagues who have argued and presented this case to this House.

I shall confine myself principally to the facts involved and incidentally to such principles of law as arise in that discussion.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] made a statement here that if all the illegal votes which were found to have been cast in those three disputed wards were taken from George Howell he would still be elected. This I dispute, and I wish to call the attention of the House to a computation which I have prepared from the finding of the majority of the committee along the line suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

I want to say right here in this connection that in the hearing before our committee, which was protracted, lasting an entire week, certain admissions were made, and I want to call the attention of the House to the circumstances under which those admissions were made.

When the argument opened we stood in the presence of this record a little appalled at the amount of work that the committee thought was before it, and when Mr. Balentine, representing the contestee, arose to talk I inquired of him whether or not certain admissions could not be agreed upon by counsel, so as to shorten the labor of the committee, calling his attention directly to the claim of the contestant to the great number of votes in these three wards cast by men whose names were not on the registration list. That was at the beginning of the hearing, and he said that the figures presented by the attorney for the contestant were inaccurate in this regard.

I forget what the exact figures were with reference to the Second Ward of Winton, but it was something like 83 votes that the contestant claimed had been cast in this way, the names of those who cast them not appearing upon the registry list. Mr. Balentine said that there were 50 in that ward, that the balance of the 83 names on that list were not names that did not appear on the registry list, but that they were substitutions.

Now I want to call the attention of the House to what substitutions meant under all the circumstances of this case. The way in which this election was conducted in these three precincts—and the method was the same throughout this whole day of iniquity in those three precincts—was this: They permitted everybody to vote. The evidence is abundant and uncontradicted upon that subject. Men came in during the early part of that day, and their names were written down on the poll book, whatever name a man gave being put down.

In Old Forge the first two names of the men who voted on that day were names that did not appear upon the registry list. Early in the day they started in that way, but as the day progressed it occurred to some one in that conspiracy that that was not a slick manner of doing this thing.

Toward the close of the day the method had changed. In place of writing new names that did not appear upon the registry list upon the poll books they picked out names on the registry list, and they had the voter vote in lieu of some man who was dead or some one who had moved out of that district. These facts are sustained by the record. There is no room for question. In substituting the names of voters who presented themselves first, for names appearing on the registry list, it chanced in a great many cases that the election officers and those doing this iniquitous act had some man vote in lieu of a man who was not then present, but the man himself coming in and voting afterwards under the same name. Proof is abundant in this record of the witnesses who testified that they voted but once, whose names appear twice. Mr. Holgate, the attorney for contestant, put in this list of names a great number of names of men whose names appeared in that way.

Now, the argument arose early, and it was fiercely contested before our committee as to what was the probative effect of these two different kinds of illegal votes. The contention upon one side was that where a man's name did not appear at all upon the registry list that was an evidence of fraud that could not be explained—that it demonstrated corruption and fraud. Upon the other side it was said that where a man simply came in and substituted or voted as a substitute for some one whose name was upon the registry list, while the vote would be illegal just the same—there was no contention about that and no denial of it—yet there was a contention that it did not tend to show corruption upon the part of the judges themselves, and that was the issue that we were trying before that committee. I want Members to remember that. So they separated these illegal votes into two classes, and Mr. Balentine at the opening of that argument, in the way I have just described, made this admission, and he made it with his cocounsel sitting by and assenting to it. He admitted that in Winton, Second Ward, there were fifty men who voted without making affidavits, whose names were not on the registry lists. In the Third Ward there were fifty-three, and in Old Forge ninety.

The argument progressed for an entire week, and as it was being concluded, counsel for contestant having demonstrated to the minds of the entire committee, I believe, that these facts existed, every fourth man coming in there and putting in a ballot when his name was not on the registry list, when the law of Pennsylvania made it a crime for the election officers to receive that vote, he also admitted, under those circumstances, that there were no affidavits made. Now, when it occurred to Mr. Green's mind that that admission was so important, so controlling in this great question of the corruption of these officers, at the very last moment, in the close of the case, he undertook to withdraw that admission, when the proceedings had been conducted through the entire argument of the case on the theory that these admissions were established facts in the case and that no inquiry need be made further about them. Take Winton, in the Second Ward 50 illegal votes for want of registry of the voters. There was a list there, a list of names, the names are all given, and that admission was made. It was argued before the committee. The names were before the committee. They are not set forth in our report.

There were some eighty-three names on the list, Mr. Ballentine contending that the balance of the names, thirty-three, on that list were substitutions that had been, by mistake, carried into and put into the wrong class in the brief of the contestant. They were substitutions, duplications, and illegal votes for various reasons. Minors voted there; men that were not naturalized; men who had not paid their taxes.

In all the report of our committee found that there were 135 illegal votes in the Second Ward of Winton.

Now, lest this may be denied, I want to read the finding of the committee upon that subject:

The contestant's counsel claimed in the argument that there were 83 such votes, and their names are set forth in his brief. Contestee's counsel, in his presence, admitted 50.

In the neighborhood of 50 votes were received in the names of men who were present and did not vote. Votes were received in the names of dead men. Several duplications were received. A large number of names were added to the registry list of this ward by the election officers in violation of the law and their duty. The illegal votes received amounted to much more than a majority of the votes cast and counted.

The exact number that the committee agreed upon as that number was 85 in this class, aside from the 50. Then we come to Winton Third Ward. Illegal votes in that ward, 80; and the contestee's counsel in his presence admitted 53; substitutions, 22; and substitutions of another class, 15—making 90 illegal votes in that precinct. This is taken from the report of the committee. In the first district of the Old Forge, illegal votes, not registered, 20 names, not written on poll books, with 20 or more Italians, voted in the names of other persons, 120 or 121, making in all 346 illegal votes in these three precincts, which the gentleman asserted could be deducted from the count of Mr. Howell and he would still be elected. Take the illegal vote of these precincts, 346, together with 200 illegal votes that we found outside of these districts to have been cast for Howell from Howell's vote and Mr. Connell would be elected by 74 votes. This is based upon the theory that you can purge the returns of these election districts.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON. I presume the gentleman is referring to what I said?

Mr. KENNEDY. I am.

Mr. JOHNSON. I said this: That if you were to deduct from the contestee every alleged illegal vote at these three precincts he would still be elected.

Mr. KENNEDY. But we took into consideration the other votes.

Mr. JOHNSON. If you throw out all the votes entirely, he is still elected. You have got to go outside of these precincts to get your 200 illegal votes in order to elect the contestant.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You do not mean that. If you really mean that, we will take you at your word.

Mr. JOHNSON. I always stand by my word.

Mr. KENNEDY. I decline to yield further.

Mr. JOHNSON. I merely wanted to correct the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now, let us go for a moment into the question of purging these returns. I am delighted with my friend from South Carolina; while he was upon the floor of this House he exclaimed with energy and force, "Why not purge these returns?" The majority of the committee say that these returns must be purged. The circumstances in this case are such and so peculiar that these returns must be purged. Let us, then, come to the question of in what way these returns can be purged and the true situation out there in Lackawanna County.

Why, the evidence in this record shows clearly that those three districts were like a deserted village at that time. There had been an exodus from these districts just a short time prior. Men had gone away; houses were empty. This conspiracy of election officers captured the polls, and they voted more votes by far than all the people who were there, Italians and everybody else.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? I know he has not very much time, but has the gentleman from Ohio taken the trouble to examine the registry list and poll list to ascertain what percentage of the registered vote was polled at those precincts?

Mr. KENNEDY. I have not figured the percentages.

Mr. JOHNSON. I venture to say in not one of the three precincts thrown out was 75 per cent of the registered vote polled, and in one of the three precincts not 50 per cent.

Mr. KENNEDY. I agree with the gentleman; that is correct. The legal voters of those precincts, a great number of people there had moved out of the district, had gone to other coal banks or somewhere else to work. The places were almost deserted when these election officers started in to hold this election. I am sorry for them on account of their absolute lack of good sense and judgment in resorting to the frauds that they adopted and the methods they followed.

They could have effected their object without having the returns show a single vote cast that was not registered. They could have put in all the illegal votes they wanted to put in by adopting the methods they did adopt later in the day, by having men vote as substitutes for men whose names were upon the registry lists. As the sun went down on that day the method changed, and the proof in this record shows it. The Italians came there in the evening and they voted under other names; they voted in the names of people whose names were upon that registry list. That is significant, and I want to call the attention of the House to the impossibility of that transaction except the election officers themselves acted in collusion with them. How did an Italian know what name to give? He had to have recourse to the registry list in the hands of election officers, and as the sun went down on that day they began to vote as substitutes for dead men, substitutes for men who were away in other counties, and the proof upon this is as clear as Holy Writ.

Now I want to reproduce some of the suggestions that came before our committee as to the absolute impossibility of a man voting whose name was not upon the registry list of those precincts. The law required and the judge of election took a solemn oath that he would not permit such men to vote unless they made the affidavit required by law. Those judges were furnished upon that morning with blank affidavits for that purpose. They could not have been ignorant of their duty under the law. Men began to come in there. The first two who came in did not have their names upon the registry list, and that was in Old Forge. All day long, or during the day, at least one-fourth of the voters of those three precincts voted in that way, and in the three precincts not one single affidavit was exacted of them. What does that mean? I would like to hear anyone attempt to explain such conduct upon the part of public officers having the purity of the ballot in charge upon any theory except that of actual fraud.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I would if I could hear it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does the record show for whom those votes were cast?

Mr. KENNEDY. It does not show for whom they were cast.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Therefore the committee have concluded they were cast for Mr. Howell; is not that the conclusion of the committee?

Mr. KENNEDY. They have not so concluded. We have concluded, sir, that there was no honest election in those districts. We have concluded, further than that, that there is no way of purging that return so as to make a finding that is based upon anything but conjecture and that the parties should be relegated to the other rule and prove aliunde the vote they received. Now, it is contended that some other sort of purging of those returns can be resorted to or could be resorted to in this case. I have no quarrel with the rule suggested, that appears as quoted in the minority report, and announced by my predecessor, Mr. Taylor, in this House, one for whose ability and learning in the law I have the profoundest respect.

It says that this rule shall not be resorted to except in cases where we are compelled to resort to it, and I contend that this is such a case. Now, we have here in these three election districts the election boards, and the proof is clear upon that subject, the election officers themselves going outside of the booth inviting Italians to come in and vote, and when told that they were not naturalized, saying, "It makes no difference; everybody votes;" and everybody did vote. The Republican watcher in Old Forge, a man who had been appointed and had gone to that polling place to see that fairness and justice was done, was excluded from the polling place.

He was a Pole, well acquainted with a large number of Poles living in that district. They came there and asked the judge that Mr. Conowski might be permitted to mark their ballots. The law of Pennsylvania provides that every voter shall have that privilege. The judge of election himself said: "Conowski can not come in; there are others here." There was a large party of Poles on that occasion that came to that polling place and wanted to vote and wanted Conowski to mark their ballots. He had a certificate issued by the proper authority authorizing him to go into the polling place for that purpose. The law of the land provided that he could go there and had as much right in being there as the judge of elections himself.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does not the law of Pennsylvania provide that each political party shall have three watchers at the polls, and only one of the three can be inside of the guard rail?

Mr. KENNEDY. The gentleman has stated the law of Pennsylvania correctly with one exception. I do not think the word "only" is there.

Mr. JOHNSON. "One only;" I will get the law.

Mr. KENNEDY. I do not care about that. Mr. Conowski was called out of that election booth. He had been permitted to be in there half a day, and he was called out by an active Howell partisan and urged to work for Howell. He said he wouldn't do it. When he went back to go in he could not get into the polling place, and he did not get in there again that day.

I do not care, Mr. Speaker, whether this man had a right in there under his certificate as a watcher for the Republican party or not. He had that right as a man selected by these voters to mark their ballots. He was there with twenty, or some such number, of Poles, and they wanted him, Frank Conowski, to mark their ballots. They testify in the record that they went in and begged the judge to let him mark their ballots. He said, "There are others here that can mark your ballots." They testified that they had no faith in the others and they went away, the whole Polish vote in that precinct declining to vote on that occasion. How can we tell how many there were, or who they intended to vote for, so as to give credit to the candidate and have their votes counted? Because when one goes and offers his vote, in a legal way, under his right and under the law, whether that vote is received or not, he has an absolute right to prove it aliunde and have it counted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have that iniquity going on in that way all day long until the day closed. Then when the day's work is done these conspirators get together for a common purpose, and nobody can read this in the record and be in doubt of that; they came together for a common purpose, they sit down and they write out their returns with their hands dirty and dripping with fraud, and we are asked what verity that return purports. We of the North—we, reared up there where it is a felony, where it is a crime that makes a man infamous to rape the ballot—believe that their returns should prove nothing, and the law supports us in that. Authorities are abundant. What can we predicate upon the returns of a set of conspirators like these?

Mr. BENNY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. BENNY. Has the committee any information or evidence to show that the same mind that directed the conspiracy in the Democratic convention so as to give the Democratic nomination to Mr. Connell did not also direct the other conspiracy that you call attention to—the conspiracy in the board of elections?

Mr. KENNEDY. I do not know what conspiracy was in the Democratic convention. The committee did not go into that conspiracy to any great extent, for we thought it was impertinent to the issue before the committee. We did go into the question of where this other conspiracy had its initiative, and there was no doubt in the record where that was. Mr. Conowski was called out, he was threatened, and when he refused to turn over he was refused admittance again—and then, Great God, my friends, the result of this election shows it. In a precinct that cast 180 fraudulent votes, Mr. Connell did not get one on the Republican ticket.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has asserted with remarkable strength that Frank Conowski, the Republican watcher, was put out of the election booth. Now, I want to ask the gentleman this question: Does not Michael McGowan, the judge of elections, tell you, in language too plain to be misunderstood, that he was put out because he was electioneering in the booth, and does not the testimony of the chief officer there tell you that he was electioneering in the booth; and I will ask the gentleman further if he proposes to stand up here and justify a violation of the law of Pennsylvania, which does not allow electioneering within 60 feet of the booth? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further. There is a great mass of testimony——

Mr. GILLESPIE. But, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman whether the record does show that.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will state that I think Mr. McGowan undertook to make that apology for his conduct. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] He did not attempt to apologize or explain his refusal to allow watchers or men there to mark the ballots for citizens. He was not called for that purpose. He did not attempt to make an apology for it, and the proof in this record shows not only what I have recited, but it shows that when men asked Republicans in the voting place to mark their ballots he had the peace officers immediately order those men out, refusing to permit them to mark the ballots.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman permit me to correct him? I understood the gentleman to say that at this precinct where Conowski was put out Mr. Connell did not receive a single vote on the Republican ticket.

Mr. KENNEDY. Well, I think I was mistaken in that regard, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact——

Mr. KENNEDY. If I remember, it was at Old Forge where he was put out.

Mr. JOHNSON. It was at Old Forge, and Mr. Connell received 117 votes at that precinct.

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes; and 117 votes were nowhere like the number of illegal votes cast in the precinct.

Mr. JOHNSON. So that not quite all the illegal votes were cast for him.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, how can we purge these returns? What court in Christendom would predicate anything upon the acts of men taken red-handed in the violation of the laws of their country? If we are correct in our conclusion that there was conspiracy among these election officers, then would you have us take their word for it that Mr. Connell in that precinct of Winton did not get one vote? Why, if they would go on all day long receiving every fourth man that presented himself, knowing that the vote was illegal, putting it in contrary to their solemn oaths, which they did——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I can not permit interruptions. I have so little time, and I have so much to say. Now, they did do that thing, and they did it knowingly. Why, they could not help but know it. Under all those circumstances they are corrupt felons, and in the prosecution of their act, before the act is completed and as a part of it, they sit down and they make this return, which gentlemen stand and beg before this House to be regarded as a sacred thing, because, forsooth, officers of the law made it! I say that it is contrary to every idea of justice to predicate any fact upon a proposition so monstrous as that. Why, they were working and putting in illegal votes; they were going out into the byways and hedges and dragging them in—the officers themselves—telling them and circulating the story that everybody was voting. Now——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to yield for a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I do.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman name one single witness that testified to any improper act on the part of any election judge in those three precincts—just one man?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Lally was an election officer in Old Forge, was he not? And there is testimony of at least four or five. When I say I can not name them I think the gentleman will excuse me, because they are Italians with Italian names.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I would like the gentleman to name the particular fact that any of them testified to, and I ask if it is not a fact that there is not any evidence whatever to support the statement of the gentleman, no testimony whatever from any witness?

Mr. KENNEDY. I assert that that fact was established to my entire satisfaction, and I do not think I reached the conclusion on account of any prejudice.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. But it is not in the record.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to go for a moment to the other questions in this case. We were confronted by a large mass of evidence. We passed, as we believed, on the law and facts in those three districts of Winton and Old Forge, as we were required to pass.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. KENNEDY. I can not consent to yield further.

Coming to this mass of evidence, which is like a great haystack, we have the issue whether our report is to be sustained; and I stand here to affirm that no man can give a reason why it should not be. No man upon the other side of the House has suggested any method by which that return down there could be purged. Who knows how many substitutions there were? We found in some precincts as high as a hundred proven to the entire satisfaction of our committee. But who can say that we found half of them?

Now, believing that the report of this committee ought to be and will be followed by this House, we go into that great mass of evidence to determine whether or not a large number of illegal voters cast their votes for George Howell.

Right here I want to recur to the subject of admissions. In the hearings the matter came up as to whether or not the attorneys for the contestee claimed there was any proof in this great record showing that any of these illegal voters cast their votes for Mr. Connell. He said they had not gone into that question. They had offered no evidence to prove the votes of illegal voters.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Holgate said there was one case of that kind, the evidence of which was disclosed while the testimony was being taken.

Now, when we approached that testimony, it was as if this House had submitted to this committee the question of whether or not in that great haystack there were rats to a greater number than eight or nine. We went out and hunted and hunted, and we found 200 rats. We saw them. The committee all saw them. There were many more than I discovered; there were evidences all around us of more rats. It seemed unreasonable to go through, clear through, that entire stack, straw by straw, when we had already found so many illegal votes that were cast for Mr. Howell.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman please name one of those votes?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir; I should be glad to name 200, if I had the time.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Then please give us a list of those 200 names. If you can give it now, why could you not give it before?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, allow me to say in reference to the evidence of this character that I think the minority of the committee in their report have selected perhaps the most abortive evidence in this entire record—in that respect a most unsatisfactory record—such evidence as the majority did not rely on in their finding.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Hearsay evidence?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, sir; evidence that was incompetent, and they set it forth here as an example.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Is it set forth there as all the evidence on the subject?

Mr. KENNEDY. I believe you say it is all the evidence.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I turn to page 2177 and I read from the testimony of Mathew McLean:

Direct examination by Mr. Gilroy:

Q. Have you any objection to telling us for whom you voted for Congress?
Mr. HOWELL. We object to the question.
Q. For whom did you vote for Congress?—A. I voted for Mr. Howell; I am not ashamed of how I voted.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I yield to the gentleman four minutes more.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do I understand the gentleman that he has 200 substantially as well-established cases as that?

Mr. KENNEDY. Substantially as well-established as that, and not one syllable of that evidence is referred to in this report of the minority.

Mr. PAYNE. And they say that is all the evidence there is on the subject.

Mr. KENNEDY. They say that is all the evidence there is.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is one of the greatest games of bluff that I have ever seen attempted in an election case.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. We say that is all the evidence with reference to those three wards.

Mr. JOHNSON. You have read from the testimony of two men who say they voted for Howell.

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are there a dozen men in the whole record who tell for whom they voted, as these two men did?

Mr. BIRDSALL. We have got forty or fifty here.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now, I refer to page 2188, to the testimony of Edwin Hicks:

Edwin Hicks, called and sworn.

Direct examination by Mr. Gilroy:

Q. Where do you live?—A. Mayfield.

Cross-examination by Mr. Howell:

Q. Were you under 22 years of age at that time?—A. No, sir; I was over.
Q. Have you paid a State or county tax?—A. No, sir.

In the very able and eloquent address of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] he impliedly asserted that the laboring men, the great order of Mine Workers of America, were responsible for the frauds in these three contested districts, saying:

> If you throw out these precincts do not stand on this floor hereafter and tell us how much you admire the virtue and intelligence of the laboring men of this country. Do not go back to your districts and exhaust all the adjectives in the dictionary to find beautiful words to tell the laboring men how much you love them.

The active conspirators whom the evidence discloses to have been responsible for the corruption and fraud in these election districts were not the laboring men. The proof discloses that they were justices of the peace, constables, tax collectors, and politicians. The laboring men were defrauded, deprived of their votes through their machinations and their wickedness. I have no fear that the great body of laboring men will not approve, and fully approve, of the action of the majority of this committee. I represent one of the greatest laboring districts in this nation. There are many of the United Mine Workers of America as well as all of the other great labor organizations in this country there, and I want to say here that no order of men has ever existed that prize higher nor more sacredly the right of an untrammeled and pure ballot than do they. The right of suffrage is the brightest jewel in the crown of their citizenship. Whatever corruption, fraud, or crime menaces the purity of the ballot, we can lift our hands and strike with the absolute assurance of their entire approval.

In conclusion, I desire to present herewith the following table of votes cast, counted, and canvassed for the Hon. Mr. McLAIN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LANNING].

Mr. LANNING. Mr. Speaker, it does not seem to me that this case presents for our consideration any question of difficulty. It is true I have not read the 4,000 pages of testimony. It is also true that I have not read the so-called "brief" of the counsel for the contestant of 400 pages, or the so-called "brief" of the counsel for the contestee of 100 pages; but I have read and reread with care the majority and minority reports.

This case was referred by the House to a committee who have given their time and thought to it and have come to us with majority and minority reports.

The reasonable way for us to handle it—indeed, the only way we may do so, is by considering these reports, for it is practically impossible for us to read the testimony or even for us to give careful consideration to the printed briefs.

Now, I will ask the gentlemen of the House to turn to page 11 of the majority report and follow me as I refer to a few figures, which figures are conceded in the minority report. It appears that Mr. Connell, according to the returns, had 13,159 votes, and that after deducting from them the returns of the three disputed districts he had remaining 12,967 votes, and that Mr. Howell had, according to the sworn returns from the Congressional district, 13,600 votes, and that after deducting from them the returns of the three disputed districts he had 12,975 votes. After deducting, then, the returns from these three disputed districts, Mr. Howell had a majority of 8 votes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, from the information that I gather from the majority report, and especially from the minority report, my mind leans to the conclusion that the majority of the committee are right in their decision that the returns from these three disputed districts are so vitiated by fraud that they are utterly unreliable and should be rejected. But I do not reach the same conclusion that they do with respect to the residue of their work. After having made these deductions they add to the remaining votes for Mr. Connell 32 which they say were proven by evidence aliunde the returns to have been cast for Mr. Connell.

Now, it is of importance for us to know what kind of evidence they had before them to support these 32 votes, and if we turn to page 25 of the minority report we will find a list of the names of thirty-two men whom it is said cast these 32 votes, and, following the list, the testimony upon which the addition of these 32 votes is said to be justified. Now, I call attention to the character of this testimony, beginning on page 26, the testimony of James T. Flynn. If you have that report in your hands and follow the names on page 25, you will see that they are taken up in that order.

Q. And Mr. Watts was also supporting Mr. Connell for Congress, was he?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Patrick J. Walsh, do you know him?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was he supporting Mr. Connell?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know Daniel Dyer up there also?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was he supporting Mr. Connell in the last campaign?—A. He was.
Q. Do you know John Kearney?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was he supporting Mr. Connell in the last campaign?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know John E. Walsh?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was he supporting Mr. Connell in that campaign?—A. He was.
Q. Do you know John Macker?—A. Well, Macker—I don't know that gentleman.

And so I might go through the entire list of thirty-two names, and you will find that that is the character of the testimony which it is said here by the majority of the committee justifies them in adding 32 votes to the number of votes cast for Mr. Connell.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LANNING. If I have made an erroneous statement, I will yield.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Not that you meant to—

Mr. LANNING. If you think I have. If you think I have made an erroneous statement you may ask me a question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not put it on the ground that you have made an erroneous statement.

Mr. LANNING. Then I must decline to yield.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will say it myself by and by.

Mr. LANNING. I think that will be better.

Now, it will be observed that the testimony extracted from this witness was that these other thirty-two men were at the polls in these three districts supporting Mr. Connell on election day in 1902. Was that testimony from which we may justly infer that these thirty-two men voted for Mr. Connell? That is the inference the majority of the committee will have us draw.

They say, or at least it has been said on the floor by some one or more, that the statute of Pennsylvania is of such a character that it makes it a crime for any man to disclose for whom he has voted, and that therefore they can not call these voters themselves and compel them to tell for whom they had voted. Mr. Speaker, whether the statute of Pennsylvania when properly construed does prevent the court from compelling a witness in any proper case to tell for whom he voted——

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not like to take the gentleman's time, but will you allow me to state that the statute of Pennsylvania——

Mr. LANNING. That can be done afterwards. I am going to concede that we are told the statute is of such a character.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me explain that it is not.

Mr. LANNING. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON. The statute of Pennsylvania is to prevent bribery and keep men from showing the ticket while voting, not——

Mr. LANNING. I doubt whether the statute of Pennsylvania could have the construction that has been given to it here, but conceding that it could, then I doubt whether, when the Congress of the United States is engaged in its constitutional right and high prerogative of investigating the question as to which of two contestants is entitled to membership here, any State can set limits to that investigation, and therefore it seems to me that these voters might have been called and compelled to tell for whom they voted; but conceding that that may be an erroneous position, an unsound position to assume, still, when the majority of the committee tells us that thirty-two men voted for Mr. Connell, we have the right to ask of them that they prove it by testimony of a character that will be admitted under the ordinary rules of evidence, and the character of the testimony is that which I have read to you. Now, was that testimony intended to be proof as to how these men voted? What did the counsel who asked these questions that I have read to you think of it? On the top of page 33 of the minority report you will find out. On cross-examination of this same Flynn the question was:

Q. About what time of day Charles Woods voted?

Mr. DONOVAN. We object to that as not cross-examination. The list of voters he had, is as to the fact of whether he voted. The counsel for the contestee claims to have a list before him, and now it is certainly not cross-examination; it does not matter whether the men voted or not, and it is useless.

Mr. BALENTINE. In answer to the objection, we say this, Mr. Commissioner, that he has asked whether these men whose names he has given—whether these men voted at the last election.

Mr. DONOVAN. No, sir; he was not asked if they voted; I asked no such question about their voting. Whom they were supporting; I spoke of supporting, not voting; that might include their voting, but I spoke of supporting.

Now, my point is this, that if the direct evidence of this witness, Flynn, is to be taken as proof tending to show that these thirty-two men voted for Connell, then it was perfectly legitimate cross-examination to ask him what he knew about these thirty-two men voting for Mr. Connell, and I will ask if there is any lawyer in this House who will dispute that proposition? Now, it seems to me that the evidence concerning the addition of the 32 votes is not satisfactory and that the majority of the committee have erred in adding the 32 votes to the number that were left to Mr. Connell after rejecting the returns from these three disputed districts.

Neither can I agree with the majority of the committee in their conclusion that 200 votes should be deducted from what remained to Mr. Howell after rejecting the returns from the three disputed districts.

The majority of the committee find that, outside of the three disputed districts, 2,002 illegal votes were received. Of these 2,002 votes, the majority find that 200 votes were shown to have been cast for Mr. Howell, and therefore they deduct these latter votes from the 12,975 votes remaining to him after rejecting the returns from the three disputed districts, leaving to him but 12,775 votes.

But we are not given the name of a single one of the 200 persons in whose names these votes were cast, nor have we from the majority of the committee any statement of the character of the evidence upon which they have concluded that these 200 votes were cast for Mr. Howell, except that, in their opinion, it was "competent and sufficient" evidence. The minority of the committee say, concerning these 200 votes:

> We are neither able ourselves to examine the evidence upon which their finding—> is based nor can we invite the attention of the House to it.

That is, the finding of the majority—

Are we, in the face of such a record and sitting as judges to hear and decide this case, to accept the naked statement of the conclusion of the majority of the committee and adopt it as our judgment, without information as to who cast these votes, or as to where they were cast, or as to why they are alleged to be illegal?

I can not agree that it appears with sufficient clearness that we ought to deduct the 200 votes from those returned in favor of Mr. Howell.

Mr. Speaker, I have already stated that I am disposed to think that the majority of the committee have correctly concluded that the returns for the three disputed districts, being the Second and Third wards of the borough of Winton and the first district of Old Forge, should be rejected on the ground that they are so vitiated by fraud as to make them unworthy of credence. But I can not agree that the 32 votes which the majority of the committee added to Mr. Connell's return should be so added, or that the 200 votes which they deducted from Mr. Howell's returns should be so deducted.

My conclusion, therefore, is that, upon the facts as they are presented to us by the majority and minority reports, we should find that Mr. Howell has 12,975 votes and Mr. Connell 12,967 votes, and that Mr. Howell is entitled to retain his seat as a Member of this House.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks of yesterday in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks of yesterday in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. McLAIN. I desire to ask the gentleman on the other side if he desires to consume any of his time now?

Mr. DRISCOLL. If the gentlemen on that side have more than one speaker to follow I think he ought to speak now, as we have used up a little more time than we anticipated.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, how much time has this side remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-six minutes remaining.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, from my observation of the results of contested-election cases since I have been a Member of the House, I am thoroughly persuaded that the cases on which there is a majority and minority report are decided, as a rule, upon party lines. Almost without exception each Member votes according to the views expressed in the report made by his party friends upon the committee. Indeed, I would have been content to allow this case to go before the House without any remarks from me had it not been the pleasure of the Speaker to assign me a place upon the Elections Committee considering this matter. Under these circumstances, I feel that I should give the House some expression of my views. In doing this we claim that the minority report should be sustained, and we feel absolutely confident that we are armed with the law and evidence in support of that position. So strongly do we believe in the justness of our cause that we have some hopes of securing at least a few votes from the dominant party.

In presenting my views it will be my aim to do so in a fair and impartial manner, freed from bias and prejudice, certainly from any unkind or offensive remarks toward anyone. I shall say nothing that is not warranted by the evidence, but of such things as are supported by the testimony I shall speak plainly. It is presumed that this House will sit here as a jury to hear the arguments presented by each side, and then decide it upon the law and facts. But, Mr. Speaker, here comes the trouble. Each Member will content himself by following the report of that part of the committee which is of the same political faith to which he bears allegiance. This is the general rule. Of course some few have heretofore acted otherwise, and possibly in this case there may be some to so act.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened with some degree of interest to the very able arguments presented by those in the interest of the contestant, Mr. William Connell. From their standpoint he and the people of the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania have been cheated, defrauded, and robbed. Mr. Connell is represented to you as a man clean of hand, clean of heart, and clean of purpose, and is by right your Congressman. From this it might appear that I intend to make an assault upon him. I have no attack to make upon the personal character of the gentleman. Be it said to his credit that he has forced and cut his way to financial success through many trials and difficulties, springing from the humble calling of a common laborer in the mines of his county to that of a millionaire many times over. It is manifest that the school in which he started life was a school of trial—the very best school from which great men are made. But, Mr. Speaker, with all this glorious and magnificent record behind him, I do take issue with the assertion so confidently made that the people of the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania have been robbed, cheated, and defrauded out of their votes. Mr. Speaker, there is another side to this question, which I will now proceed to present in a logical, impassionate, and succinct manner. By way of parenthesis, I will say right here that Mr. Howell and his supporters have been persistently, and I might say malignantly, persecuted by Mr. Connell from the very inception of this campaign.

Contestee has been compelled to fight his way inch by inch, step by step, to his seat in this House, and Mr. Connell, his rich and powerful enemy, has been the lion in his path, not only as the nominee of his party, but he actively, aggressively, and without warrant invaded the Democratic convention when it nominated Mr. Howell as its standard bearer and rent it asunder by means and causes which I will not dwell on now; but I am happy to say, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Howell, by the aid of his loyal and true friends, has defeated his rich and powerful enemy at every turn so far, and we sincerely hope that he will defeat him again before this House on this occasion.

Before going any further on this line let me call the attention of the House to the condition surrounding this Congressional fight. It has an interesting history. The scenes enacted during the coal strike, from the 12th day of May to the 16th day of October, 1902, preceding this election in November of that year are stirring. At the risk of being tedious I will briefly relate them. It throws a flood of light upon this case and will materially aid, in my judgment, the House in a correct solution of same. The Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania is located in the heart of the anthracite region and consists of one county, Lackawanna. Scranton is its chief city, being a city of about 150,000 inhabitants.

Mr. Speaker, it is a known fact that this was one of the fiercest strikes that has touched this continent, commencing May 12, 1902, and lasting until October 16 following. This strike was ordered by the United Mine Workers of America. I am not here to discuss this strike. Its history is familiar to all. In contestant's brief he says, in substance, that the Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania is located in the heart of the anthracite region. In that section labor is completely and thoroughly organized. The United Mine Workers of America is the dominant, controlling force there, and its subordinate lodges or "locals," as they are designated, have their abiding places in more than 60 per cent of the territory of Lackawanna County. Its orders are unhesitatingly obeyed. In the late spring of 1902 all the men engaged in and about the several coal-mining operations in the county of Lackawanna were ordered by the executive board of the organization above mentioned to stop work. The struggle was between employer and employee in the first instance, but it finally broadened out to a contest between capital and labor, and in the last analysis every man who was in any manner interested as owner or operator in the mining or transportation of anthracite fell within the ban of the "locals" associated with the United Mine Workers of America.

Many of these locals issued orders amounting to a blacklisting of men financially interested in the anthracite industry of this region, and in some instances positive orders were given that no man so interested or concerned should be supported for any political office by any member of the particular "local" giving the order, regardless of the individual's preference.

Hon. William Connell, the contestant, was largely interested as owner and operator in the coal-producing business of this entire section, and the force of this conspiracy was principally directed against his candidacy for Member of the House of Representatives in the Fifty-eighth Congress of the United States from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania.

Under these stirring times so graphically said by contestant in his brief this campaign was waged. On the 6th day of July of that year the Republicans duly nominated William Connell by a primary election as its "standard bearer."

The Democratic convention of this district assembled on the 16th of September, 1902, to nominate some one for Congress, orphans' court judge, and county commissioner and a mine inspector. Now, gentlemen of the House, here is where Mr. Connell and his followers, which included all the mine owners and sympathizers, got in some of their fine work. When this convention assembled, a desperate and determined effort was made to capture the same for the Republican nominee, Mr. Connell, for Congress, and thereby get his name upon the regular Democratic ticket. You now begin to see that the fight between the employer and the employee, or, at this stage, it might be more appropriate to say between capital and labor, was intense and fierce.

Party allegiance was forgotten in a great measure, but be it said to the credit of the Democratic party, this plan failed of its purpose. Those delegates who entered into this conspiracy were in the minority, and as soon as they discovered they were defeated in their plans they bolted the convention and held one at another place, and proceeded to nominate William Connell and at once filed a certificate of his nomination with the secretary of the Commonwealth. The delegates remaining with the regular convention nominated Hon. George Howell for Congress, nominated candidates for orphans' court judge, county commissioner, and mine inspector. I am reliably informed that the original convention was composed of 192 delegates, and only 32 bolted, leaving 160 participating in the regular convention. Certificates of the nominations made by them were filed with the secretary of the Commonwealth. The validity of the nomination of George Howell was contested by William Connell and his followers in the courts of that county, and both certificates filed before the secretary of the Commonwealth were declared by that tribunal invalid and the nomination of both the Democratic candidates for Congress and the Democratic candidate for orphans' court judge were stricken from the regular Democratic ticket, and this ticket was made up with a blank where the names of the candidates for these offices should have been.

In the meantime William Howell and his followers, anticipating this result, had gotten up nomination papers for him and the orphans' court judge to run for Congress and this judgeship respectively. The title they chose was that of "Antimachine party." The reason that this was done was from the fact that under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania no ticket can be put in the field by nomination papers using singly or in combination a name which resembles one already in the field. The result of this situation was that the regular Democratic ticket voted in the county of Lackawanna was under the caption of the "Antimachine party" ticket, and every candidate upon it received a majority of the votes cast, and they were duly declared elected.

Mr. Connell at this stage of the proceedings began to hunt around for excuses for his defeat. He challenged the correctness of the vote in many of the precincts in this Congressional district. He charged illegal voting, fraud, and corruption from start to finish, but signally fails to show it, though he has taken the testimony of many witnesses—6,500 in all—touching the allegation of fraud lodged against each of these voting places thus challenged. He has failed because the fraud does not exist. As we have shown, the contestant and the contestee were candidates for Congress in this district, the contestant being the Republican candidate and the contestee the Democratic candidate. Mr. Howell, the contestee, was elected by a clear majority of 641, evidenced by the official returns. Upon these returns a certificate of election was issued him, by virtue of which he holds his seat in this House. Mr. Connell, the contestant, alleges that at this general election the contestee was not duly elected to Congress from this district, but claims that he received the majority of the legal votes cast at said election, and that he is entitled to the seat in this Congress as Representative from the said district. The official returns give Howell 13,600 and Connell 13,139, thus showing 26,739 votes returned for both.

We, with perfect confidence, assert that these returns are practically true and correct. Mr. Connell denies this and says that they are false, fraudulent, and not entitled to credit. We think we are now prepared to defend them against this unwarranted attack.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known rule of law that when fraud is charged the burden is always upon the contestant to show both fraud and injury to himself in the conduct of the election and count of the vote, and that he must also show that he received the greatest number of legal votes. Unless he can show that he has received a majority of the legal votes cast he can not complain of irregularity or fraud unless he can affirmatively show that he was thereby damaged. Mr. Paine, in his work on The Law of Elections, in section 762, states tersely and completely the law when he says:

> The burden of proof is always upon the party attacking the official returns. The presumption is that the officers, charged by the law with the duty of ascertaining and declaring the result, have performed that duty faithfully. The action of a board of supervisors of election, when in due form, is prima facie correct and must stand until it is shown, by extrinsic evidence, to be illegal or unjust. The presumption is always against the commission of a fraudulent or illegal act, and in favor of the honesty and correctness of the official acts of a sworn officer. The true rule, while it may not require the exclusion of all reasonable doubt, does require clear and satisfactory proof of fraud or mistake before the legal presumption in favor of the correctness of the acts of sworn officers will be nullified. (Paine, sec. 762.)

Mr. Speaker, the decisions on this line all concur that—

> The machinery of the election laws is designed to elicit an expression of the will of the electors in the choice of officers. The fundamental principle is that the election shall terminate according to the will of the majority or plurality of those qualified to vote, and if this has been realized, a mere omission of statutory observances, prescribing the details for conducting an election, will not vitiate it. If the election was held at the proper time and place and under the supervision of competent persons, mere irregularities, which concern the form of conducting it, will not avail to avoid it, unless it be shown that legal votes have been rejected or illegal votes received and that, because of one or the other or both, the result does not conform to the will of the voters or uncertainty has been cast upon the result. No failure of duty, which is no more than an irregularity on the part of the registrars, inspectors, and canvassers of the ballots, shall stand in the way of the popular verdict. When the popular will is ascertained, the design of the law is complete and accomplished.

Keeping these principles of the law before us, we will apply them to the facts of the case as we unfold them in the line of our argument.

He has made sweeping charges against the people of the Tenth Congressional district. Contestant has crowded page after page of testimony into the record, making the longest record, so I am informed, ever filed in a contested election in this House. But they have not shown that he received a majority of the votes. They have shown no substantial fraud. It is true some irregularities in the conduct of the election have been shown, some illegal votes have been received, some for one cause, some for another. But, Mr. Speaker, as I have stated, mere irregularities, which concern the form of conducting an election, will not vitiate it unless it be shown that legal votes have been rejected or illegal votes received and that, because of one or the other or both, the result does not conform to the will of the voters.

He has failed to show that, and appeals to you to throw out certain precincts entirely and other precincts partially, but he has failed to make out his case by submitting competent material and legal evidence. The majority of the committee before whom this case was referred have narrowed the issue down to three boxes, the Second and Third wards of Winton and the first district of Old Forge. These three boxes, the majority of the committee contend, should be thrown out and the 33 votes cast at these boxes should be counted for Mr. Connell on proof aliunde. The returns in these three boxes are as follows:

	Connell.	Howell.
Old Forge, first district	113	288
Winton, Second Ward	20	182
Winton, Third Ward	31	155
Total	164	625

Giving Howell 461 majority.

If these three boxes are thrown out, this still leaves the Hon. George Howell 8 majority. They have not quite got him yet. What is their next step? They attempt to prove aliunde that 33 votes in these three boxes they are attempting to throw out voted for Connell, thereby giving the majority to Mr. Connell by about 12 votes. Let us address ourselves to these two propositions: Shall these three boxes be thrown out? If so, have they proved aliunde that 33 votes were cast in them for Mr. Connell?

It might be well to state right here that the summary of the findings of the majority of the committee were as follows, to wit:

According to the certified returns of the canvassing board in the Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, these candidates received votes as follows:
William Connell		13,139
The official returns from the Second and Third wards of Winton and the first district of Old Forge are as follows:
Winton, Second Ward, Connell	31
Winton, Third Ward, Connell	24
Old Forge, first district, Connell	117
		172
		12,967
Votes proven aliunde to have been cast for Connell in the Second and Third wards of Winton and the first district of Old Forge, and which should be added to his count		32
		12,999
Deduct illegal vote		1
Connell's total legal vote		12,998

George Howell		13,600
The official returns from the Second and Third wards of Winton and the first district of Old Forge are as follows:
Winton, Second Ward, Howell	182
Winton, Third Ward, Howell	155
Old Forge, first district, Howell	288
		625
		12,975
Deduct from Howell's count on account of illegal votes proven aliunde to have been cast for him, as above set forth		200
Howell's total legal vote		12,775
Connell's total legal vote		12,998
Howell's total legal vote		12,775
Connell's plurality		223

It therefore follows that William Connell was duly elected Representative in Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania.

Such are the findings of the majority of the committee. They find that such gross and palpable fraud was connived at and practiced by the election officers at the precincts of first district of Old Forge, Second and Third wards of Winton, as to deprive the returns of any verity whatever, and they accordingly recommend that the entire returns at these three precincts named should be cast out. We, the minority, in our report, which I had the honor to submit to this House, say, in substance, that we are unable to discover any testimony that shows or tends to show fraud on the part of the election officers. In another part of my remarks I will call attention to the facts and endeavor to show that the inferences and conclusions of the majority are not warranted. Assuming, for the purpose of discussion only, that there were as many illegal votes as the majority allege at the precincts cast out entirely by them, we insist that the method adopted was harsh and unjust. The true rule, in consonance with common sense and common justice, and sustained by the weight of authority, is that the polls should be purged of illegal votes if it can possibly be done. Mr. Taylor, of Ohio, who took high rank in the House both on account of his ability as a lawyer and his fairness as a man, in the case of Taylor v. Miner, said:

> This drastic method is never to be resorted to except in case of absolute and unavoidable necessity. The doctrine of throwing out entire returns by reason of fraud, while tolerable in theory, and sometimes essential in practice, is, nevertheless, most vicious and unhappy in its application. I doubt if a single instance will be found in a legislative contested-election case where a proposition to strike out an entire return, if of the substance of the case, was decided on any other than party lines. A principle thus fostered and thus abused is not a principle to be invoked except where the exigencies of the case absolutely demand it.

The supreme court of Pennsylvania in Chadwick v. Melvin (Brightley's Election Case, 551) states the doctrine very strongly "that there is nothing which will justify the striking out of an entire division but an inability to decipher the returns or a showing that not a single legal vote was polled, or that no election was legally held."

In Le Moyne v. Farwell, Forty-fourth Congress, Digest of Election Cases, page 711, it was stated:

> That where fraud is shown to exist the poll shall not be rejected unless it is impossible to purge it of the fraud. It being shown that very many illegal votes had been received with the fraudulent connivance of the judges of election, and there being definite proof that at least 252 of the votes shown by the numbered ballots in the box to have been cast for contestee were illegally and fraudulently cast, the committee deducted these 252 votes from the vote of contestee.

And on page 728 it further said:

> The exclusion of an entire poll is the very last resort, and it must never be done where there is any rational means by which the illegal votes can be eliminated.

In the New Jersey case, as reported in the Digest of Contested Election Cases, page 651, it is held that the burden of proof is on the contestant, even to the proof of a negative. It holds that—

> The distinction between the controversy at the polls and that before the committee is manifest. At the polls, the voter is a party. When the polls are closed and an election is made, the right of the party elected is complete. He is entitled to the returns, and when he is admitted to his seat there is no known principle by which he can be ejected except upon the affirmative proof of a defect in his title. Whoever seeks to oust him must accomplish it by proving a case. The difficulties in his path can form no possible reason why the committee should meet him halfway. The rule of reason requires that he should fully make out his case, even though it involve the proof of a negative.

In Bromberg v. Haralson, Forty-fourth Congress, Digest of Contested Election Cases, page 652, it is stated that—

> The burden of proof is always upon the contestant or the party attacking the official returns. The presumption is that the officers charged by law with the duty of ascertaining and declaring the result have discharged that duty faithfully.

In Cessna v. Myers, Forty-second Congress, Digest of Contested Election Cases, page 652, it is held that—

> The burden is upon the party attacking the legality of a vote to prove that the person whose vote is in question voted, that the vote was for the competitor, and that the voter was lacking in some legal qualification.

In Butler v. Lehman, Thirty-seventh Congress, Digest of Contested Election Cases, page 652, it is declared that—

> Allegations involving charge of crime must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.
> When a contestant makes a charge of incorrectness of returns, which involves a direct charge of crime against the election officers, he would in strict law be required to establish the charge by the same degree of proof required in a criminal case.

In Taylor v. Reading, Forty-first Congress, it was held that—

> Fraud to be eliminated if possible without rejecting the returns.
> Where contestant proved that more votes were cast for him than were returned to him, and there were circumstances indicating fraud, the committee preferred not to reject the polls, but corrected the vote according to the proof.

In Atkinson v. Pendleton, Fifty-first Congress, it is held that—

> Returns which are tainted with fraud can not be made the foundation of the title to a seat in the House. The results should be purged of the fraud if practicable and the poll only thrown out, when no other alternative remains, but to give effect to the fraud or to reject the polls.

In Barnes v. Adams, Forty-first Congress (Digest of Election Cases, p. 727), it is held that—

> The rule is well settled that the whole vote of a precinct should not be thrown out on account of illegal votes having been cast, if it be practicable to ascertain the number of illegal votes, and the person for whom cast, in order to reject them and leave the legal votes to be counted. Legal votes are not to be thrown out in order to get rid of illegal votes unless necessity requires it as the only means of preventing the consummation of a fraud upon the ballot box.

All the above authorities hold that the entire vote should not be thrown out except in very extreme cases.

In the matter of purging the poll, McCrary, on page 225, section 300, lays down three rules when the evidence fails to establish how the illegal votes were cast: First, declare the election void; second, divide the illegal votes among the candidates in proportion to the whole vote of each; third, deduct the illegal votes from the candidate having the highest vote. The third proposition is so drastic, harsh, and unjust that we apprehend few men would, acting judicially, invoke it. In this particular case, however, even if there were as many illegal votes as the majority allege, and all of them should be deducted from the contestee, he would still have a majority. We insist that the three polls complained of should be purged by deducting the illegal votes from such candidate as received them if the evidence establishes how they were cast. In the absence of proof as to which candidate received the illegal votes, then we submit that they should be divided between the two candidates in proportion to the whole vote each received.

No difficulty is in the way of this plain, simple, legal method of disposing of the illegal votes. The names of the alleged illegal votes are given. The grounds upon which the votes are claimed to be illegal are printed in the record. Beyond all this, an effort was made to show that the illegal votes were cast for the contestee. There was nothing to hinder the committee from passing one by one upon every alleged illegal vote. If they became satisfied that the vote was illegal, they could then examine the testimony as to who received it. If the evidence established this fact, the proper deduction followed necessarily. If the evidence failed to show who got the benefit of the illegal vote, it should have been divided between the candidates under the rule laid down by McCrary on Elections.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the facts of this case have been so ably discussed by the gentlemen who have preceded me in this argument that I deem it unnecessary to dwell at any length upon them.

Permit me to call your attention to Winton Borough, Second Ward. This is one of the boxes they seek to throw out. The official returns at this ward give George Howell 182 and William Connell 31. The majority of the committee give as their reason for throwing out this ward, first, that the election officers permitted 50 men to vote whose names were not on the registry without taking the affidavits required by the laws of Pennsylvania; second, that in the neighborhood of 50 votes were received in the names of men who were not present and did not vote; third, that a large number of names were added to the registry list by the election officers in violation of the laws and in violation of their duty; fourth, that there were several duplications and votes received in the names of dead men.

Now, let us examine these findings in their order. The majority of the committee insist that the reception of so large a number of illegal votes from nonregistered persons who filed no affidavits can be accounted for on no other grounds than that of gross and palpable fraud, connived at, encouraged, and participated in by the managers of the election. Of the vast number of officers connected with the holding of the election of this box not one of them was called to the stand in the case, and no witness has testified to any act or utterance of said election managers.

Then the only ground for rejecting the precinct is the unwarranted inference that such a large number of illegal votes could not have been cast without fraud. There is no competent testimony in the record to show that anyone voted who was not entitled to do so. It is true that the counsel for contestant argued strenuously that there were many names on the poll list that could not be found upon the registration list, and he further charged that no affidavits were required of the nonregistered voters. We assert with absolute confidence there is no legal proof in the record that the managers of the election failed to take affidavit, as the law required, from all persons who applied to vote and who were not registered. Now, some days after the argument had closed, the counsel for contestant filed with the committee a certificate, which is as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, County of Lackawanna:

I, John F. Cummings, prothonotary of said county of Lackawanna, in said Commonwealth, do hereby certify that among the returns of election held in the said county of Lackawanna on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1902, which returns are now on file in my office, pursuant to law, it appears that one affidavit only was filed from the first district of Old Forge Borough, in said county, which affidavit is the oath of office taken by the election officer, and that no affidavit of any voter was filed from said district.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and have affixed the seal of court of common pleas of said county of Lackawanna, at the city of Scranton, in the said county, this 12th day of January, A. D. 1904.

JOHN F. CUMMINGS,
Prothonotary of Lackawanna County.

It must be manifest to anyone that this certificate is not competent evidence. This certificate is to the effect that no affidavits of unregistered voters are on file in the office of the prothonotary. I take it that it is a well-established rule of law that an officer having custody of official papers can make certified copies thereof which are competent evidence, but he can not certify that a paper does not exist. He is under the law authorized to certify to records, but not to the nonexistence of records. If the fact that a paper is not in his office is sought to be proved, he should be sworn, examined, and cross-examined like any other witness. The election officers may have taken the affidavits as the law required and by carelessness, accident, or otherwise failed to file them. The law of Pennsylvania requires that after the election officers shall have taken the affidavits of nonregistered voters and canvassed the votes and announced the result they shall make out triplicate returns and shall then place said affidavits in an envelope along with the list of voters, a tally sheet, and their oaths as election officers and deliver them to one of their number, designated as a return judge, and that he, not the board, shall deliver the same to the prothonotary's office, subject to examination as other election papers are.

It occurs to us that the contestee is not required to prove that these affidavits were actually delivered to the prothonotary by the return judge, for the manifest reason that the contestant has the burden of proving that the affidavits were not taken, and the fact that he has shown or attempted to show by the above certificate that they were not filed in the prothonotary's office does not establish the fact that they were not taken. In support of this position I respectfully refer to section 762 of Paine on Election, where Curtin v. Yocum is cited, and where the doctrine is stated in the following language, to wit:

The failure of the officers of election to return to the prothonotary's office the affidavits of nonregistered voters does not raise the presumption that they also failed to require such affidavits.

If we are correct in this view of the law there is not one word of testimony that the election managers allowed fifty persons or any other number to vote without affidavits. If contestant really desired to establish this one fact beyond all controversy it was in his power to do so, but he has seen proper to pass by the best evidence which was accessible to him, and he has been contented with the introduction of evidence of a technical, inferential, and of an unsatisfactory character in support of his position.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to the Third Ward of Winton. The official returns at this ward give George Howell 155 and William Connell 24. The reasons assigned by the majority for throwing out this box are of the same nature as those in the Second Ward of Winton. The judge of elections at this precinct testified that no one voted at that box who was not registered, and therefore, for that reason, no affidavits were taken. It is claimed by the contestant that some voted in this box in the names of men who were absent, and that some voted whose names were not entered upon the poll list. In support of these allegations contestant has introduced F. A. Snyder, Beni Betti, and Domineck Cherntom as witnesses. In my judgment they absolutely failed to sustain these allegations. Their testimony upon its face is unsatisfactory. I have not the time to quote it to the House. You will find it printed in full in the report of the minority in this case, which now lies upon the desk of each Member. I ask the Members to read this testimony, and I feel sure that if they will do so they will not place any confidence in it whatever.

But I must pass on to Old Forge district. At this box George Howell received 288 votes and William Connell received 117. The majority of the committee asked that this box be thrown out because "peace officers were present, apparently assisting the election officers, who were friends of the contestee; threats were used; a Republican watcher was forcibly ejected; the right of challenge was denied; voters were denied the right to make their own selections of persons to assist them in marking their ballots, and ballots were marked contrary to instruction of voters, and the election generally in this district was conducted in a high-handed manner and without regard to the provisions of law and the sworn obligations of the election officers." Now, Mr. Speaker, these are sweeping charges, but they have not been proved. The one man above all who should know whether these allegations are true or false was old man Michael McGowan, who was the judge of the election at this box. This old gentleman is 73 years of age, and he says: "The election was the most peaceable and orderly election ever held at Old Forge." The only man who raises any complaint whatever is Frank Conowsky. If one will carefully read the testimony in this case, he will be thoroughly convinced that Conowsky was properly ejected.

Then there is another witness that throws a flood of light upon this point. I allude to Lewis Williams, the Republican overseer, who, by the way, appointed Frank Conowsky as the Republican watcher. Lewis Williams was present in an official capacity to see that no wrong was done the Republican party, and in his sworn testimony he does not say one word about "the unlawful and high-handed action of the managers." The chief witness for the contestant was Frank Conowsky, and if one will read his testimony carefully I am sure it will impress him as being very unsatisfactory. As the facts connected with this box have been so ably presented by other speakers and they are so fully set out in the report of the minority, I will not consume any further time on this point. I will now pass to the discussion of the aliunde votes. After throwing out these three boxes by the majority of the committee it still leaves George Howell with 8 majority. In order to overcome this they have resorted to aliunde evidence to ascertain what legal votes were given the contestant. They are of the opinion that the following men have been shown by competent evidence to have voted for Connell:

Winton Borough, Second Ward.—Charles Watts, Patrick A. Walsh, Daniel Dyer, John Kearney, John E. Walsh, Anthony O'Connor, E. M. Sickrells, Thos. Watts, John Ward, Frank Regan, John Finicu, Michael Chone, William Higgins, Patrick Walsh, Albert Balderson, Jas. Walters, Jas. Malone, Chas. Decker, P. Nelon, Patrick Davitt, Michael McCormick, Patrick Judge, jr., Jas. March, John Davitt, John Lawler, John McCloy, and Michael Bierwich.

Winton, Third Ward.—Mike Hignay, John F. Loftus, John R. Evans, and Thos. Ruane.

Old Forge, first district.—Frank Conowsky.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one witness, James F. Flynn, is called to support this allegation. It is him that they rely upon for proof of all these aliunde votes except 3. If any Member will take the time to read his testimony, which will be found printed in full in the minority report, he will say that his testimony is wholly incompetent, unreliable, for reasons appearing upon its face.

Mr. Speaker, the record in this case discloses the fact that the contestant has shown great interest in the prosecution in this case against the contestee. It shows that 6,500 witnesses were sworn and introduced by contestant and only 312 by contestee. The evidence alone fills four large volumes containing 3,824 pages of fine printed matter. Along this line I wish to call the attention of the House to this one fact, that in their effort to throw out the First and Second wards of Winton and first district of Old Forge they have not called one of the election officers in any of these boxes to testify in this case.

At that election there were nine tickets, viz, Republican, Democrat, Prohibitionist, Socialist, Citizen, Ballot Reform, Union. Under the law each of these three boxes had one judge, two inspectors, two clerks. In addition to that each one of these parties was entitled to nine watchers, which would make twenty-seven at each box; and the three boxes would make eighty-one in all. They had two overseers to each party, making eighteen at each box, and the three boxes, making fifty-four overseers divided among all these parties. This makes 150 officers that attended the three boxes, and I say to this House that the contestant in all his zeal in making out his case has not called a single one of these parties save Frank Conowski. Now, I ask you in all candor, Why did did he not do that, when the evidence shows that he burned the wood and sifted the ashes in gathering up his testimony? He hired men to go out and drum up this testimony, and not one of these parties has he introduced. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am trespassing on the time of other gentlemen, but I wish to say that I was somewhat discouraged when we began this case, but I now feel more hopeful. I think the majority of this House is beginning to believe that if this man can be turned out upon this testimony, there is not a man in this House whose majority is 1,000 or less but what could be deprived of his seat, especially if his contestant is backed up by such a man as William Connell, with his millions and ten lawyers to hunt up the testimony.

There is another thing I want to allude to. There has been a good deal said about illegal registry. Mr. Speaker, under the law the county commissioners make out two copies of the original registry and send them to the officers of each voting place. These are made out in alphabetical order. Each inspector takes one, and when a man comes up to vote his name is called out and the other marks "voted." When a man comes up who is not registered by reason of any cause he makes the proper affidavit. Then what is done? When he qualifies his name is written on this registry list. It is written on the only list they have there. I want to ask the other side how do they know that the parties were not registered when these very registry lists were impounded by the contestant himself and are now in the courts? We have never seen them. If they had produced them, perhaps scores of these parties they say were not registered might be found upon the registry. I will ask the chairman where are they? If he does not answer, I can. They are to-day in the ballot boxes. Where are the ballot boxes? They are to-day in the courts. Now, you can see at a glance that if anyone qualified on the day of election his name should be on that list. What do they do? The contestant goes to the original registry in the commissioners' office and compares it with the poll list, and every man that he finds not on that original list he says is an illegal voter.

We claim that if the registry lists that the officers had were before us perhaps it would show that every man that they claim was not qualified is upon that list. [Applause.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I make that as a challenge.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLAIN. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not true that Mr. Balentine brought a lot of the original lists, and is it not true that we said that if you wanted to bring certified lists in they could bring them in and put them in evidence?

Mr. McLAIN. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why didn't you bring them in?

Mr. McLAIN. He, contestee, stood before the committee from the time it opened, begging that the ballot boxes be produced and brought in before the committee.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did not the gentleman vote against producing the ballot boxes?

Mr. McLAIN. I voted against bringing the votes for the purpose of counting them.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did you not vote against producing the ballot boxes?

Mr. McLAIN. There was some question of that kind. I admit it. On reflection, I did so vote in the committee. I will say right here that I was like the balance of the committee at the start—did not understand the situation thoroughly. If I had known as much about the case then as I know to-day I do not believe you could have got a majority report from the committee in favor of contestant. I will confess that I did not understand the case thoroughly at that time, but since I have investigated it, I say to this House that the registry lists are to-day in that ballot box. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, it has cropped out in this case that Mr. Connell is a multimillionaire. The other day I clipped the following from one of the leading daily papers of this city:

William Connell was born in Nova Scotia, and began life in the Pennsylvania coal regions, working down in the bowels of the earth with the ordinary miner's pick and outfit and earning the princely sum of 40 cents a day. The story of his rise to wealth is substantially the story of many another man's rise to affluence. He acquired the money and no one ever accused him of being dishonest in getting it. Not many years ago he sold out his mining interests to a coal trust, and now receives from that concern the handsome revenue of $1,000 a day, payable every Saturday night. This income is to continue for ten years. Besides this amount turned into his coffers every week, Mr. Connell's wealth is variously estimated between ten and twenty-five millions of dollars.

I take it that the above history of Mr. Connell is substantially correct. I do not allude to it for the purpose of arousing prejudice, but to throw light on what I am about to say. Mr. Howell is a very poor man. He is charged with fraud and corruption in this election, yet, I take it, he has not a dollar beyond his monthly earnings. I am told he was superintendent of schools before he came to Congress. This campaign was waged during the great coal strike, and Lackawanna County was the scene of this great disturbance. The miners were opposed to Connell because he had been a coal operator. Howell entered the fight without a dollar, while Connell had his millions. When the result of the election was declared, Howell had 13,600 votes and William Connell 13,139.

The result of the election shows, further, that all the candidates on the Democratic ticket received large majorities in Lackawanna County. The plurality for Robert E. Pattison for governor was 5,625; George Guthrie, lieutenant-governor, 3,890; James Noland, secretary of internal affairs, 3,287, and M. F. Sandow, orphans' court judge, 1,837. This shows beyond question that the Democrats swept the county of Lackawanna by a large majority. Mr. Howell, candidate for Congress, received the smallest plurality of any of the candidates—461.

Mr. Howell got the certificate of election. Evidently Mr. Connell's ambition was crushed. He took his case to the election commissioners and lost. He next summoned to his aid nine able lawyers residing in his district. Then this contest began. Fraud and corrruption were freely charged to Howell and his followers by Connell. Here comes in the humorous part of the whole affair. Connell with his millions! Howell without a dollar! With these facts before you let the fair and impartial mind judge who was better equipped to act wrong. It does occur to me that Connell is asking his party friends in the House to do for him what his constituents had refused to do—to give him a seat in this House. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman in charge of the time on the other side if he has more than one speaker upon his list. If so, he ought to produce him now. He has a right to the close, but not to close with two speeches.

Mr. McLAIN. Will the gentleman upon the other side answer that question?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, we have only thirty minutes left, and I would say that if the gentleman on the other side has more than one speaker he ought to have one of them speak now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will pardon me, he is entitled to the close, but he is not entitled to two closes. Therefore he ought to consume some of the time now.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Very well; I will yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, there is one very interesting development in this matter, and that is the development of a conscience on the other side of the House. It is the first time in three years that I have had the honor to sit in this body when any such thing has been apparent. All who have spoken have assured us that conscience was their only guide and mentor in the matter.

Mr. BURLESON. There is no manifestation of one upon the Republican side, however. [Laughter.]

Mr. PALMER. The trouble with this case is that the Republican conscience has become a little too active. I hope this manifestation will continue. There certainly was none of it in the Butler case in the last session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, which presented the most outrageous conglomeration of frauds that were ever perpetrated on the ballot box. There was not a single gentleman on the other side of the aisle whose conscience was stimulated to vote against seating a man in whose behalf every offense that could possibly be conceived against the election laws, including ballot-box stuffing, false personation, forgery, perjury, personal violence, everything short of murder had been perpetrated. I said I hope this manifestation of conscience will continue, so that if in the inscrutable purposes of a divine Providence it should ever seem to be necessary to furnish this country with another administration in which these gentlemen have a majority, it is to be hoped, I say, that conscience will still be active when they have a majority on these committees and when they have the power to seat and unseat Members. I have waited three years for an opportunity to witness this manifestation.

"Prophets and kings desired it long, but died without the sight."

What we are all after in this case is the truth. I agree that all are equally conscientious and all equally desirous of arriving at the exact truth of this controversy. It was submitted by the House to a committee consisting of nine Members. The testimony has convinced six of these nine Members that Mr. Connell is entitled to this seat and that Mr. Howell ought to be unseated. The testimony has equally satisfied three of the nine Members that there is no evidence whatever in the case, not one spark or scintilla of evidence, that would justify the House in unseating the sitting Member. The fact that this decision is on party lines is of no consequence. It may be conceded that all of these gentlemen are equally intelligent, that they are equally able, and that they are equally conscientious. So that the question comes back, What is the truth? Are the six mistaken and are the three right, or are the six right and are the three mistaken?

Let us look at it from a common-sense standpoint for a minute or two and in the light of human experience. It is objected that the best evidence of the facts upon which the majority conclusion was reached has not been produced. The real question is not whether the best evidence has been produced, but the question is whether the evidence is such as, uncontradicted, ought to satisfy a reasonable man under the circumstances, taking everything into consideration, that the facts exist. Consider that little ward of Winton borough, where the majority of the committee find that 100 fraudulent votes were cast. The committee say fifty men voted in that ward who were not on the registry, who filed no affidavits. Under the decision of the highest court of the State of Pennsylvania those votes were illegal and void, and no outside testimony could ever make them good. What is the evidence on which the majority of this committee find that conclusion? First, it was perfectly easy to satisfy themselves that these voters were not on the registry list by comparing the poll list with the registry.

Mr. JOHNSON. But that they have not done.

Mr. PALMER. That they did do. It is said that this registry list which was used by the election officers on that occasion is in the ballot box. Well, let it be granted that it was.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does not the gentleman think, as a lawyer and as a citizen of Pennsylvania, that they are?

Mr. PALMER. Why, certainly it is in the ballot box; but the original from which that registry list was made is in the commissioner's office in the city of Scranton, and there was not the slightest trouble in comparing that poll list with the registry and with ascertaining the fact, at least, that there were fifty men who voted at that election who were not registered on that list.

Unless they filed the affidavits that the law prescribes, they were illegal voters. Did they file the affidavits? It was the duty of the election officers to transmit those affidavits, if they were filed, to the prothonotary of the court and put them on file there. They do not go into the ballot boxes, but they go to the prothonotary. The prothonotary certified that no such affidavits were ever filed there.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. PALMER. No; I will not, just now.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know my friend does not want to make a mistake; he is too good a man for that.

Mr. PALMER. I will admit that I am a good man. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. The certificate to which the gentleman refers related only to Old Forge; there is no evidence as to Winton—none in the world.

Mr. PALMER. If that certificate pertains only to Old Forge, then is there other evidence that there were no affidavits filed at the Second Ward of Winton?

Mr. JOHNSON. None in the world.

Mr. PALMER. I will tell you what evidence there was. There was the evidence of Mr. Howell's lawyer, who stood up before this committee and admitted that no affidavits were filed in that ward; the evidence that the counsel of the contestee put into his printed brief on page 18 that there were no affidavits filed in that ward. He says there were no affidavits filed in that ward because there were no voters who voted who were not registered.

From the beginning of this case until the end there has never been a denial on the part of anybody that there were fifty men who voted in that ward on that day who were not registered. It is not until this case comes to be argued here in this House that this fact is denied. They are now making that claim in the face of their own admissions in their printed brief and in their argument before the committee.

Mr. Speaker, if it were true that the fifty men who voted and who were claimed to be nonregistered did in fact file affidavits, would not the contestee in this case have been swift to call the election officers to prove it? Could he not have proved in just one minute by calling the judge of the election or the clerk of the election, or any inspector of the election, that no man voted on that occasion who was not on the registry for whom an affidavit was not taken? Could he not have explained that these affidavits were transmitted to the prothonotary, and were lost on the road or eaten up by mice or abstracted by the enemy.

Sometimes the facts which are not proven speak as conclusively and as forcibly as facts which are proven; and when from the beginning it was contended that these fifty nonregistered voters voted without affidavits, and when the contestee failed to attempt to establish the fact that affidavits were filed, that seems to me to be at least some evidence on which the majority of the committee could base their finding.

The committee finds that there were fifty men who were returned as having voted in that precinct who were not there at all. I suppose the best evidence in proof of this fact would have been to summon the men themselves if they could be found on the face of the earth, to bring them before a commissioner and take their testimony that they were not present and did not vote. That was not the course pursued. A man was sent out who was not a stranger—a man who was a tax collector and assessor in that little borough of Winton, who knew every man, woman, dog, and cat in the place. They sent him out with a list in his hand of fifty men who were returned as having voted there, but who did not in fact vote, as it was alleged. He was sent out to ascertain facts, and he came back and reported that A had moved away, that B was in some other country, that C had died, etc. Nobody contradicted his testimony or doubted his veracity. It may not have been the highest or best form of evidence; but in the absence of any contradictory proof which Mr. Howell could have made, if any such existed, it was enough to satisfy a reasonable man of the fact.

If the testimony satisfied the majority of the committee, then they had a right to make that finding. Granted that the best evidence was not produced. Is there a man here who doubts for a single moment that it is a fact that the fifty men whose votes were returned as having been cast on that occasion were not there and that they had moved away from that place and did not vote at that election.

It was found in that ward of Winton borough that more than a majority of all the votes cast were illegal votes; that this return on which Mr. Howell had 150-odd majority in that ward was a false return—a return which instead of importing truth imported falsehood; that no reliance could be put upon it. What is to be done with this return? Under the well-settled principles of law it must be rejected. What happens next? There was no possibility of purging that poll. How could you purge the poll? The provision for a numbered ballot had been abolished through the effort of some idiotic so-called "reformers." The last chance that we had in Pennsylvania to purge a poll has been taken away by a constitutional amendment abolishing the numbered ballot.

The only way that the poll could be purged would be to call every voter who voted there to state for whom he voted. The ballot in Pennsylvania is secret, and no man can be compelled to tell how he voted. Of course if a man's vote is illegal he shields himself on the ground that he is not bound to criminate himself by testifying that he voted at all or for whom he voted. If his vote is not illegal, he is not bound to tell anybody for whom he voted. Therefore the proposition that the ballot box could be purged, that it could be ascertained how many legal votes and how many illegal votes were cast and for whom was simply impossible. The other rule of law that applies to such a case is that the return shall be rejected when it does not import truth or is tainted with fraud, and then each party shall have an opportunity to prove how many legal votes he actually received in that poll. That opportunity Mr. Connell embraced, and he was able to prove that in these two wards of Winton and in the Old Forge precinct at least thirty-one persons who were legal voters cast their ballots for him.

Again, it was said that this was not established by the best evidence. It is not a question whether it was proved by the best evidence, but the question is whether any man here doubts the fact that these thirty-one Republicans who had been supporting Mr. Connell and who declared afterwards that they had voted for him—is there a doubt that they did so vote? Is there a doubt that those 31 votes ought to have been given to him? The question is whether the fact exists, and whether in the absence of any contradiction the evidence is such as to justify a belief in the mind of a reasonable man.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, it was the intention of my colleague [Mr. RANDELL of Texas], who is on the committee, to address the House to-day, but he, like myself, has not the time. I now yield the balance of the time to the contestee [Mr. Howell].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-six minutes, which he yields to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Howell].

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. William Connell was renominated by the Republican party of Lackawanna County, which is the Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, some time in July, 1902. His certificate of nomination was regularly filed with the secretary of the Commonwealth, at Harrisburg.

The Democratic party held its convention in Scranton, some time in September—September 16, I believe—1902, and at that convention, as usual, there were some Connell Democrats—some Connell conspirators. After we had elected a permanent chairman; after George Howell had been nominated for Congress; after Judge Sando had been nominated for the orphans' court, thirty-five of those conspirators bolted the convention, went to Melvin's Hall, and there organized a rump convention, which nominated the Hon. William Connell upon a Democratic ticket and a Democratic platform diametrically opposed to the Republican platform indorsed by the Republicans in July, 1902.

Judge WADE has read that platform for you, and I will not repeat it, for my time is short; but we want to call your attention to this fact: Mr. Connell was not only pleased with the action of that rump convention—he was not only pleased with that Democratic platform, but he publicly indorsed both by filing his certificate of nomination with the secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Further, he was bold enough not only to file his certificate of nomination as a Democratic candidate, but he petitioned and prayed the Dauphin County court to declare my certificate invalid and to erase my name from the Democratic column.

After a trial lasting many days, after the examination of carloads of witnesses sent on by the contestant from Scranton to Harrisburg, that court decided that my certificate was invalid, and also his.

Knocked out of the Democratic column, robbed of a nomination, George Howell went home, filed 3,000 signatures, took them to Harrisburg, and got his name in a column known as the "anti-machine column." George Howell had but two weeks to conduct his campaign, but when the vote was counted, canvassed, and returned, a plurality of 461 votes declared not only the success of George Howell as an antimachine candidate for Congress, but it expressed the disapproval of a man who wanted to be both Republican and Democrat. [Applause on the Democratic side.] For George Howell carried the Republican strongholds of Lackawanna County.

Mr. CONNELL (the contestant). Where?

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. I carried the west side by 792 votes.

Mr. CONNELL. That is Democratic.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. The Republican city of Scranton is not a Democratic stronghold. The west side is a Republican stronghold, and I carried it, and the returns will show it.

Mr. CONNELL. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. I want my time. I simply tell you the fact that I carried the Republican stronghold of Lackawanna County, which is the west side of the city of Scranton.

Mr. CONNELL. That is not so.

Several MEMBERS. Order! Order!

Mr. McLAIN. I submit to the Chair whether the gentleman, Mr. Connell, who is not a Member of the House, as I take it, has a right to interrupt the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. The contestant can only address the House by its permission, which has not been given.

Mr. CONNELL. Have I not that right?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed without interruption. He declines to yield. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. The Republicans of Lackawanna County are loyal to the Republican party and loyal to Republican principles. They believe, however, in the existence of two great parties and the right of representation. They would not destroy the Democratic party, because they know that the Republican party has been made stronger and better by its opposition. Had Mr. Connell not attempted to run as a Democratic candidate; had he relied upon his individual strength and party prestige, I tell you frankly and freely I believe he would be occupying a seat on the other side of the House to-day, honored and respected for his allegiance and loyalty to the Republican party and Republican principles.

If a lawyer goes into court and asks damages for injury to his client and it can be shown that his client is guilty of contributory negligence, the case is thrown out. The contestant in this case is guilty not only of contributory negligence by accepting a Democratic nomination, but he is guilty of violating a fundamental law which gives to every party in every State the right of representation on the ballot. The monuments at Yorktown, Bennington, Saratoga, and Bunker Hill stand for the right of representation in all its varied forms. God forbid the day when all men think alike and one party dominates the land. I have no desire to consume the time of the House or digress from the main issues in this contest, but the people of Lackawanna County have been recklessly charged with gross and flagrant violations of election laws, illegal voting, fraud, bribery, and corruption, and I deem it my duty and high privilege on this occasion to say a word in their defense.

Reading the notice of contest, you would be led to believe that Lackawanna County, the home of the miner and the heart of the anthracite region, is a district where men have no regard for law, where civic virtue is dead, and where anarchy is king. Lackawanna County, Mr. Speaker, is not a seething pile of political corruption, as the contestant would have you believe. This district has a reputation to be envied, and I will prove this statement, not by appealing to the imagination, but by the facts, figures, and testimony furnished this House by the contestant himself, who has attempted to defame the county that gave him his great wealth and the good people who raised him to his present proud political eminence.

In that notice of contest contestant alleges that 13,584 men voted for George Howell who had not resided in the election district where they voted the specified time required by law; that 10,253 ballots were marked by my friends and fraudulently cast by my agents; that 13,600 men voted for George Howell who had not paid their taxes, and, last but not least, though George Howell's name did not appear in the Democratic column, he alleges that 21,243 ballots marked in the circle at the head of the Democratic column were counted for George Howell. These statements or allegations are so wild, rash, reckless, and erratic that no rational mind can conceive them to be true. If they are true, there was not a legal vote cast for George Howell out of 13,600.

There may be some element of truth in each and every allegation made by the contestant, and if there is, I desire that it be carefully weighed by the House; but his boldest allegation, one that imputes gross fraud, contains not a single grain of truth. Contestant sets forth as his strongest allegation that 21,245 ballots marked with the circle at the head of the Democratic column were counted for George Howell. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the testimony? What are the facts? On November 5, the morning after the election, one named Decker lodged information with the court of Lackawanna County to the effect that the election board in the second district, Third Ward, of Scranton, counted ballots with a cross in the Democratic circle for George Howell. The court immediately ordered the board to appear. They were examined, and it was found that the board did count 7 votes thus marked for George Howell. The court immediately ordered 7 votes deducted from George Howell's total vote in the district. Were any other ballots similarly marked and counted for George Howell? In the testimony of 6,500 witnesses you can't find one.

These facts and figures may form no part of the majority report, but they have been sent broadcast over this land, imputing dishonesty to the people of Lackawanna County, giving them a reputation for lawlessness which they do not deserve. The contestant in this case has been the foremost man and political leader in Lackawanna County for twelve long years. The political methods devised by him were the methods accepted by all lieutenants; his power was so supreme the political machine never moved except when oiled and guided by his deft and cunning hand, and I tell you now that, if such a corrupt condition existed in Lackawanna County as he would have you believe, it is high time the political leadership of the county was changed and the contestant, William Connell, held responsible for his stewardship as a political boss in that county for the last twelve years.

Expecting a retort from friends of the contestant to the effect that contestee made some bold allegations, too, which were not proven—not sustained by the evidence—permit me to read some of these allegations and tell you why they were not proven, why they were not sustained.

We alleged the following:

"Fourth. That one John Gibbons, an agent and employee of yours, the contestant, gave to Charles H. Schadt, high sheriff of Lackawanna County and a Democratic party leader in said Congressional district, the sum of $2,500 for the purpose, as specifically stated by said Gibbons to Schadt, of procuring election officers in said Congressional district to make false returns, by which more votes than cast for you, the contestant, were to be counted, returned, and canvassed for you.

"Fifth. That said John Gibbons, agent as aforesaid of you, the contestant, being the indorser on a note for $1,000 given by John J. Fahey, the chairman of the convention called by the Democratic party in this district to nominate a candidate for Congress, offered the said John J. Fahey that he would take up said note for said Fahey and relieve him from any liability thereon provided that he, the said Fahey, would use his influence as chairman of said convention to have it indorse the candidacy of yourself for Congress in this district.

"Sixth. That one James S. McAnulty, one of your agents, gave to Wade M. Finn a check for the sum of $150 for the purpose of bribing voters to vote for you in the Congressional district at said election.

"Seventh. That said James S. McAnulty, as well as others acting as your agents, disbursed many other large sums of money to other persons for the purpose of bribing voters to vote for you in said election."

Of those designated in the allegations just read, we put upon the witness stand one John J. Fahey, who was chairman of the Democratic convention. His testimony, to say the least, is very interesting. He testifies on page 3108 that John Gibbons, a Connell Democrat, would take care of his note of $1,000 if he, Fahey, would play fair at the convention. I may not be familiar with human nature, I may not know the true code of political ethics, but as I understand human nature and the political world, men at conventions offer money, not as an inducement to play fair, but to play crooked.

John Early's testimony, read by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER], is found on page 3081 and stands uncontradicted.

The allegations made by Wade M. Finn, Charles H. Schadt, and James McAnulty were not sustained because they disobeyed the subpœna issued by the commissioner of the contestee. But what did we do when they failed to respond to this subpœna? We went before the United States commissioner and had them arrested; but what was the result? As soon as the commissioner had placed two of them under bail, United States District Attorney McCarroll was sent for, and at the hearing of Wade M. Finn he declared that the subpœna issued was defective, because the locus or place for hearing was not sufficiently and specifically designated. The subpœna reads as follows:

[Copy of subpœna. William Connell, contestant, v. George Howell, contestee. In re hearing before commissioner sur contested election of Representative in Congress.]

To Charles H. Schadt, of the Sixteenth Ward of Scranton, greeting:

You are hereby notified and commanded that, laying aside all, and all manner of business, you be and appear in your own proper person, and have with you your naturalization certificate, or your father's naturalization certificate, and receipts for State and county taxes paid between November 4, 1900, and October 4, 1902, before W. W. Baylor, notary public, a commissioner duly appointed, at court-house, court room No. 2, on Thursday, the 19th day of February, 1903, at 9 o'clock in the forenoon, then and there to give evidence touching the matter of the contested election of Hon. George Howell to a seat in the House of Representatives in the Fifty-eighth Congress of the United States, wherein Hon. William Connell is the contestant and Hon. George Howell is the contestee, on behalf of the contestee.

Hereof fail not under penalty prescribed by law.

Witness my hand and seal at Scranton, Lackawanna County, Pa., the 13th day of February, A. D. 1903.

[SEAL.] W. W. BAYLOR,
Commissioner and Notary Public.

[Seal of W. W. Baylor, commissioner and notary public.]
My commission expires January 19, 1907.
A true and attested copy.

R. E. FENTON.

Scranton is on the subpœna twice; there is but one county seat in the Tenth Congressional district, one court room No. 2, and every man subpœnaed was an old resident of Scranton. Charles H. Schadt had been high sheriff and Wade M. Finn a member of the council for many years, yet our learned United States district attorney saw fit to rely upon the technicality and ordered those in custody discharged. I may be wrong from a legal standpoint, but I think that the refusal of these witnesses to testify in obedience to the subpœna issued should be taken as an admission that they were possessed of information and had knowledge of facts which would prove the allegations of the contestee.

Again, Mr. Speaker, let us examine some of the agencies that cooperated to defeat the contestant. Mr. Connell conspired not only to defeat himself by accepting a Democratic nomination, but the times, the environment, the economic conditions of the county, worked against him. Let me read from the contestant's brief:

The Tenth Congressional district of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is located in the heart of the anthracite region. In that section labor is completely and thoroughly organized. The United Mine Workers of America is the dominant controlling force there, and its subordinate lodges, or "locals," as they are designated, have their abiding places in more than 60 per cent of the territory of Lackawanna County. It is an "imperium in imperio," and its orders are unhesitatingly obeyed.

Hon. William Connell, the contestant, was largely interested, as owner and operator, in the coal-producing business of this entire section, and the force of this conspiracy was principally directed against his candidacy for Member of the House of Representatives in the Fifty-eighth Congress of the United States from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania.

All this I freely and frankly admit. In the Tenth Congressional district labor was completely and thoroughly organized. The lodges or locals had their abiding places in more than 60 per cent of the territory of Lackawanna County; and now, sir, I ask you, if this be all true, and you assert it, why was my election an unnatural result, for as the miner votes in Lackawanna County so goes the election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Again, looking at natural conditions and natural results, what do the returns indicate? Every candidate upon the antimachine ticket, upon which I ran, received a majority of the vote cast in the county and was duly declared elected. Robert E. Pattison, the Democratic candidate for governor, received a plurality of 5,000; George Guthrie, Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor, 3,890; James Nolan, candidate for secretary of internal affairs, 3,287, and M. F. Sando, candidate for orphans' county judge of Lackawanna County, running under exactly the same conditions as George Howell ran, got a majority of 1,837. Facing these facts, who will say that Howell's election was a surprise or an unexpected result when the Democrats swept the county?

Again permit me to eradicate a false impression. The contestant in his brief seeks to convey the impression that at the time of the election there was great excitement in the county, that lawlessness prevailed, that a strike was in progress, and that soldiers were on guard to suppress violence and disorder. Such was not the condition in Lackawanna County on election day. At the time of the election the strike was over, the military forces had been withdrawn, men had returned to work satisfied that the mine Commission appointed by President Roosevelt would deal fairly with them. The election in all respects was the most orderly and legally conducted election ever held in the county. Not a single arrest or charge was made on election day, immediately before or after. There is not one scintilla of evidence in the testimony of 6,500 witnesses that shows one act of violence or intimidation at any of the 163 polling places in the county of Lackawanna.

Having recited the history of the case, let us now examine the majority report. That report asks you first to throw out the Second Ward of Winton because votes were recorded in the names of men who were not present on election day and did not vote. Now, gentlemen, what is the testimony? One M. J. Gaughan, a paid professional searcher and collector of testimony, whose home was not in Winton, but in Olyphant, who gathered his information three months after the election, who was not in or near the polls in Winton borough on election day, goes upon the stand and testifies from secondhand hearsay evidence that forty or fifty men were not present at the polls on election day and did not vote. If such testimony can be introduced and relied upon, no man's seat in this House is secure for a single day. Again, this witness, M. J. Gaughan, in my judgment is utterly unworthy of belief. Any man who goes upon the witness stand and testifies that he knows personally every man in Winton borough, a mining district of 3,000 inhabitants, composed principally of Poles, Slavs, Huns, and Italians, shifting and moving constantly, is either an ignorant man or a deliberate perjurer. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Employers of long experience in this district and throughout Pennsylvania find it so difficult to remember the names and faces of the foreign miner and laborer that surnames and Christian names are practically unknown and unheard. The Poles, Slavs, Huns, and Italians go by number, not by name. Those of you who live in farming communities with a settled population may be inclined to believe that Gaughan knew personally 3,000 men in Winton borough, but those of you who reside in mining districts know that his statement is absolutely false.

Further, the majority report declares that votes were received by the election officers in the names of dead men. How many such votes were received in the names of dead men? Only two, Thomas Wright and John Mackey. Thomas Wright's name is on the registry list and voting list, but Gaughan, this paid professional searcher, tells you upon information received from Wright's father that he, Thomas Wright, died in Pittsburg September 20, 1902. You may believe Gaughan if you are so disposed, but I will accept the written registry book, the written voting list, and that fair presumption of law that sworn officers did their duty—nothing to the contrary appearing in this record—rather than accept the testimony of this man Gaughan, with a wonderful memory, a wonderful nose for scenting the trail of lost men, a wonderful ear for gossip, secondhand information.

Regarding John Mackey, the other dead man, I have good reasons for believing that he was alive on election day and that he voted. A witness called by contestant says that he was killed November 15, 1901; but is he not mistaken? The assessor by law is compelled to make a house-to-house canvass in May of each year, and write in his registry book a full and complete list of all the voters in his district. The assessor, John Loftus, made such a canvass in May, 1902; and what do we find? Do we find the name of John Mackey recorded by the assessor? Yes, sir. Recorded by him in a house-to-house canvass made seven months after Mackey is said to be dead. Now, Mr. Speaker, are you going to ignore, set aside, this written record made by an officer under oath, at a time when there was no party feeling or party politics in the air, when this contest was not dreamed of, and accept the oral testimony of a witness at a time when party feeling ran high, when this contest had engendered political strife and political hatred? I believe not. When you look at this record there is but one conclusion—John Mackey was alive on election day and voted.

Again, it is alleged that many votes were cast by men whose names could not be found on the registry list in this ward. Similar allegations are made for the Third Ward of Winton and the first district of Old Forge, and as these districts are composed principally of Poles, Slavs, Hungarians, and Italians one answer will suffice for all. In Pennsylvania, it is true, names on the voting list should correspond with names on the registry list, but to make them correspond under existing conditions in these districts is an impossibility. I hold in my hand a list of the names from the Second Ward of Winton, copied from contestant's brief, and I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that there are not two men in this intelligent body that can pronounce or spell them correctly: Theodore Gruzdioloonicz, James Elneges, John Michaels, Joseph Batnicak, Joseph Iratt, John Saveon, Vasil Juzinoc, Vasil Ladmrak, Vasil Ladmirjak, Andrew Grusalanick, Joe Yutsco, Vasil Zuynioc, Korse Jubiancy, Jacob Magarin, Silvertie Marsala, Duherij Michalay, John Francke, Steve Revildjack, Joe Maslar, Frank Laskovskie, Mack Annlkoski, Michael Hanaha, Michael Horiahra, Anthony Sekovic, Valentine Rugrec, Andrew Senick, Steve Waslar, Martin Makala, John Senko, Peter Giszar, Hric Pavander, Mich Oaph, Jacob Lustick, Andrew Dalosh, Andrew Malnar, John Novack, Mich Harksum, Joe Skovina, George Pedracki, Steve Korach, John Varhalak, Joseph Marshler, Paul Kackosh, George Kackosh, John Kovalisky, Charles Savicky, Theodore Grusdlovick, John Pliska, John Olorin, Thomas Davitt, Paul Michaulic, John Marck.

I will go farther and say that you can not find five professors in Yale, Harvard, or Princeton that can spell and write these names correctly when correctly pronounced to them. Is it not unreasonable then, to expect miners, unskilled and untrained, with but the rudiments of an education, to spell these names correctly, to make the voting list correspond to the registry list. Further, is it not unfair, unjust, and harsh to accuse these hard-working people of fraud when neither you nor I could perform the task imposed or placed upon them by the law?

Let us now pass to the Third Ward of Winton. The star witness for the contestant, and the chief witness upon whom he relies to establish irregularities and fraud by the election officers, is one Benni Betti. It is alleged that Benni Betti and H. V. Lawlor, the tax collector, with the assistance of one named Lally, voted twenty unnaturalized Italians in the Third Ward of Winton. If Benni Betti is reliable, if his testimony is trustworthy, it certainly is against us; but who is Benni Betti, and what is he? Are you going to believe him? Are you going to believe a man who could not qualify as a voter, one who could not produce his certificate of naturalization or his tax receipts, a man who sold his honor, his manhood, and his highest American privilege for a glass of beer and 25 cents? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Are you going to believe the sworn officers of this election board of Americans guilty of fraud on the testimony of this unwashed dago, this unnaturalized subject who said that all these Italians voted and still not one of their names appear upon the voting list? (Reply brief, p. 48.)

Again, Mr. Speaker, does H. V. Lawlor, their own witness, corroborate Benni Betti? No, sir. Lawlor denies in toto every statement made by Benni Betti. When James Conry, judge of the election, and their own witness, was asked about Lawlor voting these Italians in a bunch, he said Lawlor voted some that day, but he always asked permission and never asked in a bunch. But, Mr. Speaker, suppose the statements found in the majority report are true; that Benni Betti and H. V. Lawlor did corral these Italians and turn them over to John Lally, and, further, that he marked all their ballots, pray tell me what right have you to believe or even suspect, these Italians having been turned over to John Lally, that their ballots were marked for the contestee? John Lally is a loyal Republican, ever has been, and was a faithful Republican inspector at the polls that day. Do you doubt his politics? James Conry, their own witness, testifies on page 1011 that he never saw John Lally at a Democratic caucus or a Democratic convention, and Peter Lawlor, one of their own witnesses, testifies on page 1098 that John Lally is a Republican. The Republicans of that district were not working for the Democratic party that day. The contestant received more votes in the Second and Third wards of Winton than did President McKinley. President McKinley's total vote in the Second and Third wards of Winton was 50; the contestant's 55, and any Republican who gets more votes than William McKinley in a Democratic district ought not to cry "Fraud."

Before leaving the Third Ward of Winton let me call your attention to the third paragraph on page 6 of the majority report. It read as follows:

> Where the letters "D. I." appear opposite a name on the registry list they indicate that the man is of foreign birth and has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States. They also indicate clearly that such a man is not entitled to vote, unless he qualify himself by an affidavit in conformity with the law, taken by the election officers and filed with the returns. Those letters are intended to and should put the election officers on guard. There is no honest reason why they should accept votes from such men without the required affidavits.

They would have you believe that where the letters "D. I." appear opposite a man's name on the registry list, made in May by the assessor, he couldn't vote in November. If a man's name is recorded by the assessor in May and he is naturalized in June—and this is frequently the case—he isn't required to make an affidavit when he votes. The production of his naturalization certificate to the election officers is all the law requires. An election officer has no power to go behind a certificate of naturalization and demand additional proof. (1 Brewster, 273; 2 Brewster, 138.)

Again, the registered voter who is challenged need not subscribe to an affidavit. If registered and challenged for nonpayment of tax he can, by taking an oath orally, qualify himself and vote legally. (Eighth Penn. Dist. Reports, p. 595.)

The statements found in this majority report concerning affidavits are certainly a revelation to those familiar with the practice of the election laws in Pennsylvania. A man marked "D. I." on the registry list can vote in November if naturalized in June and he produces his certificate of naturalization to the election officers. Again, the registered voter is not compelled to take and subscribe to the affidavit when he is challenged. On the contrary, proof on his part may be made by parol. (Eighth Penn. Dist. Reports, p. 595.)

OLD FORGE.

The election officers of Old Forge were so ably defended by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] that I shall simply call attention briefly to one fact regarding this district.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIRDSALL] recited with great particularity yesterday the misdeeds and irregularities of the election officers of Old Forge. He would have you believe that this election board violated every election law, permitted gross irregularities, and committed great fraud, but I desire to remind you of one thing. Every booth on election day was guarded by two overseers, whose plain duty it is to carefully observe the action of the board, and if things are not conducted in accordance with the law and spirit of the law such violations as are observed must be reported immediately to the court. After the election held in November, 1902, not a single overseer in Old Forge and Second and Third wards of Winton, reported a single irregularity.

Is it not fair to presume that these overseers on election day did their duty, and if there had been any irregularities that they would have reported to the court? The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, no man in Old Forge ever dreamed of any irregularity on the part of the officers until this contest was instituted and Mr. Baring with his detectives got to work in Old Forge. To hold this election board of Old Forge guilty of fraud is to put a premium on political corruption, sanction the purchase of votes, and commend the debauchery of the ballot. If there was anything done at Old Forge on election day that was not square, why, pray tell me, didn't Mr. Mason or Mr. Judge, the two Republican members of that board, protest? Why didn't Mr. Williams, the Republican watcher who was in the booth all day, why didn't he protest or say something about this irregularity before this contest began?

Mr. Speaker, before this House can throw out the Second Ward and Third Ward of Winton and the first district of Old Forge, this House must accept as competent testimony the evidence gathered by that paid professional searcher, M. J. Gaughan, who gathered his evidence three months after the election.

2. This House must believe Benni Betti, who sold his vote for a glass of beer and 25 cents.

3. This House must give more weight to the testimony of Frank Conowsky, a political paymaster, than they do to the testimony of Michael McGowan, judge of election, and the peace officer and the constable, both sworn officers of the law.

4. This House must believe that a man can not vote in November, though naturalized in June, if the letters "D. I." appear opposite his name in the assessor's registry book made by him in May.

5. You must believe that the registry books introduced here by the contestant have been in the hands of the election officers.

6. You must believe that the miner, untrained and unschooled, can make the voting list correspond to the registry list when 90 per cent of the names in these districts are names of Huns, Slavs, Poles, and Italians.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me discuss another matter aside from the three districts asked to be thrown out. If you and I go into court to try a case as lawyers, and you offer in evidence a document or instrument of any kind, I certainly have the right to examine that document or instrument. What was done in this case? Before we began to take testimony the contestant, by an order of the United States district court, impounded all the ballot boxes or their contents. After hearing testimony for some time in the Second and Third wards of Winton, Mr. Holgate, counsel for contestant, offered in evidence the ballot boxes of the Second and Third wards of Winton and said that these ballot boxes would be opened at Scranton at a time certain. Mr. Holgate never fulfilled that promise, and when we requested the committee to make him stand by his offer and bring the boxes here they denied our request. These boxes contained the only registry list used by the election officer on election day; these boxes contained positive evidence of the fraud alleged by the contestant; these boxes contain the evidence of his election or mine—yet he fears to bring them in and face the contents, but skulks behind a Republican majority and refuses to face his own evidence offered in this case. "Thus does conscience make cowards of us all."

I will be charitable. I may not understand why this House refuses to open the boxes, but I do know that where a plaintiff suppresses evidence in court his suppression is a confession of guilt.

There are other questions, Mr. Speaker, involved in this case; but why should I weary the House? Can I hope for a judicial determination of this case? Can I hope that some Republican has asked the question, Is my party master or servant? I recognize the fact that there are two kinds of party allegiance. One is a rigid, unyielding determination to obey party leaders. It is such allegiance as a subject owes to his king, and a man who believes in this kind of allegiance is a liegeman of the party, contented to sing in a quiet undertone, "It is not for me to reason why, but do or die."

On the other hand, the second kind of allegiance stands for independence, and an independence that is a notice and a warning to party and party leaders to do no wrong or be condemned. It is a fealty or party spirit subservient to reason, guided and controlled by conscience.

Stranger as I am in this House, I know not which kind of allegiance is in your heart—whether you believe in the citizen who holds his party to a strict accountability or believe in the man who is held by his party to a strict accountability. Speaking for myself, I am the slave of no party or creed. I believe that the man who is true to himself can not be false to his party, his country, or his God.

Now, gentlemen, my time has about expired and I must yield. If you believe that George Howell, who never sought this Democratic nomination; who never asked a man for a vote; who never spent one dollar for electioneering purposes; who spent seventeen years of his life just preceding this election as a schoolmaster; who ran at a time when the Democrats swept the county—if you believe he was not honestly elected, vote for the contestant, William Connell. On the other hand, if you believe that William Connell, the foremost political leader in Lackawanna County, the man who had his right hand on the Republican machine and his left hand on the Democratic machine, who wanted to play the double rôle of Republican and Democrat—if you believe that he was not honestly elected, vote for the contestee, George Howell. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the minority has expired, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I heartily congratulate the Members of this body at the approaching close of this debate and contest. I congratulate the committee, both the minority and majority thereof, and I really feel like congratulating myself first, because working through these large volumes is a good deal like drudgery, and the task is not a pleasant one. If a man does not agree with his party sometimes, he is criticised, and if he believes his party's candidate is honestly and fairly elected, and stands up for his views, then other people may say that he is biased and influenced by partisanship rather than by the merits. Now, our friends on the other side, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], said they came into this case and commenced the examination of the evidence with minds unbiased and open.

I do not question their sincerity for a minute, but let me state our mutual record and experience, that you may see whether they or we can be said to have undertaken this case with minds free from prejudice, bias, or partisanship. The same three gentlemen who signed the minority views in this case were in the Fifty-seventh Congress. They were all on this same Committee on Elections. There were several cases before this committee, and in every case we decided in favor of the Democrat. Mr. Jack, of Pennsylvania, then on this committee, wrote a report in favor of a Democrat in one case where the election was hotly contested, and all these Democratic members concurred, and the report was unanimous.

In another contested case I wrote the report in favor of the Democrat, and these same three gentlemen heartily concurred in that. We were all harmonious in the last Congress. When we met this year I supposed and hoped that we might agree again, but when a majority of this committee agreed on a report in favor of a Republican, they promptly disagreed, and I began to think they are good natured and concur only when we find in favor of a Democrat.

My sympathies are with the laboring man and with the poor fellow who is making an uphill struggle, and therefore when the committee commenced work on this case my sympathies were with Mr. Howell. By disposition I am inclined to favor the under dog in a fight.

But I sat in this case judicially; I examined this record, and I spent a month on it, and I came to the conclusion that I could not find for him without bending over backward. I admit that the gentlemen on the other side can examine this record superficially and find subjects for criticism. I admit that there is a great deal of evidence here which is incompetent—some of it in answer to leading questions, some of it hearsay, some of it conclusions instead of facts. There is much that is incompetent, but there is much of it that is material and competent and establishes the conclusions which we find. I admit, further, that you gentlemen may go into this record and out of the 6,500 witnesses called by the contestant criticise many of them.

You can make fun of their evidence and can find excuses to air your views on election cases if you wish, but if you examine this record as thoroughly as we have you will find that, while there is a lot of poor evidence, there is also a lot of honest, substantial, reliable evidence, on which we predicate this report which we present to you. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHIRAS] says he was never in the committee room; he never saw the record; he never examined the briefs; he simply read the two reports, and he comes to the conclusion that we made a mistake. But he seemed to agree with the report except as to the proof of votes by aliunde evidence.

The contestee seemed to think he was making progress on this side of the Chamber, and yielded time also to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LANNING], who claimed his mind was open when he examined this case. He is inclined to side with our opponents, but says that our report is correct in its conclusion that the two wards of Winton and the first district of Old Forge should be thrown out for fraud.

Now, I want the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LANNING] to listen to what I say. I will ask him if he considered we were correct in that conclusion?

Mr. LANNING. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. In the throwing out of those three districts and that your mind was open and unbiased?

Mr. LANNING. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And willing to find in favor of Mr. Howell if the evidence justified it. Now, if we were justified in throwing out those three districts that would leave Mr. Howell only 8 plurality. Everybody agrees to that.

Now, we claim we have proved by aliunde evidence in those three districts 32 votes for Mr. Connell. We claim at least 200 votes out of the 2,002 illegal votes were shown by competent evidence aliunde to have been cast for Mr. Howell. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] to what I say. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LANNING] says that we were correct in throwing out those three districts. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he agrees with him?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I do not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Very well; all right. Mr. LANNING says that the only question in his mind is that we have not proved enough votes to overcome the plurality of 8 for Mr. Howell, if those three districts are thrown out. Does the gentleman stand up here as a man and say that we have not by evidence satisfactory to him overcome that plurality of 8? Does the gentleman say so as a man and as a lawyer?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think you have proven 6 votes by competent evidence.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did you not in the committee room admit that 8 were proven?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not remember that I did. I will say that whenever in reading over the testimony it appeared that the witness had voted, I said, "The fact is so."

Mr. DRISCOLL. And were there not about thirteen of those cases where you said, "The fact is so?"

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not remember how many.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Do you deny that there were thirteen?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not believe that there were six.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Now, one word in conclusion. Judge BIRDSALL, who addressed the House yesterday on this question—who has been on the bench and is a well-poised lawyer—said that about fourteen or fifteen hundred of those 2,000 illegal ballots were cast for Mr. Howell. And another gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY], who has spoken this morning, has said that 600 or 800 or 1,000 of those votes were cast for Mr. Howell. I suppose I was one of the conservative members of that committee. I did not go as high in my estimate as some of the rest; but I had no doubt that on the evidence at least 200 of those votes were cast for Mr. Howell.

Mr. JOHNSON rose.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I can not yield further for interruption.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why have you not given us the names of those 200, so that we could examine the testimony on the subject?

Mr. DRISCOLL. That was not necessary when we showed that only 10 illegal votes were required to overcome the apparent plurality for Mr. Howell after those three precincts were thrown out. Nobody questioned this in the committee. It was unnecessary to set out the names with the pages of the evidence.

One thing more. You gentlemen from South Carolina and you gentlemen from other Southern States, where you have "the grandfather clause" in your constitutions——

Mr. JOHNSON. We have not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Well, you will have if you are not stopped. But let me tell you that the patience of the American people is about exhausted. The time is coming when you will have to take off your hats and bow to the majesty of the Federal Constitution. You will have to reduce your representation in this House or obey the supreme law of the land.

Mr. BARTLETT and several other Members. We do obey it.

Mr. FINLEY. We have no "grandfather clause" in the constitution of South Carolina.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will not be interrupted any more.

Mr. FINLEY. You certainly misstate the fact.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?
Mr. DRISCOLL. No; I have only a minute more.
Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Is not the gentleman ashamed to appeal——
Mr. DRISCOLL. I will not be interrupted.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.
Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes; I decline to be interrupted.
You people have your constitutions; you have your election laws. They are very strict, and you enforce them. You think that we ought to recognize your constitutions and your laws within your several States. I say to you to be consistent you should uphold the laws of Pennsylvania, and according to those laws and the facts in this case George Howell was not elected and William Connell was. [Applause on the Republican side.] One word more. Pennsylvania does not enact laws for the purpose of shutting out at her elections any Pole or Slav or Italian, if he is a qualified voter. You do pass your laws to shut out voters.
Some of you gentlemen yesterday spoke about the labor vote. We are not afraid of the labor vote in our districts. The people who cast that vote are honest, sensible people. They want to vote once and only once, and our laws provide for that, and you need not be afraid of the labor vote. They are disfranchised now anyway under your constitutions and your laws.
Mr. RANDELL of Texas. That statement is not the fact so far as Texas is concerned.
Mr. DRISCOLL. My time is up; I simply want to say to you gentlemen across the aisle if you want to be consistent, if you want to do to us as you would have us do to you, stand by the law of Pennsylvania; maintain the dignity and majesty of that law and enforce it, so that no man shall vote more than once; so that foreigners, as soon as they land here, shall not be allowed to be "run in" and voted where the bars are let down. Protect the ballot box, protect the citizenship, and you will be serving your country better than by listening to appeals here for sympathy in behalf of George Howell. I believe that in this case you ought to stand up and support us in this vote.
Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman has one minute; I wish he would let me interrupt him.
Mr. DRISCOLL. Well, go on; take your minute.
Mr. JOHNSON. I want to say this——
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] yield?
Mr. DRISCOLL. No, I do not yield. I ask for a vote now.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.
Mr. DRISCOLL. I ask for a vote.
Mr. JOHNSON. There is no doubt about the law of the State of Pennsylvania.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, will the gentleman——
Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has two minutes remaining.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In that two minutes will the gentleman pardon one question?
Mr. DRISCOLL. I ask for a vote now, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the previous question will be considered as ordered and the question taken.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This is a question so easy to answer——
The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.
Mr. JOHNSON. I have been governed by the law of Pennsylvania——
The SPEAKER. The debate is over. Gentlemen will please be seated. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Resolved" and insert:
"That William Connell was not elected a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, and is not entitled to a seat therein.
"Resolved, That George Howell was elected a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is it admissible to call for a division of the two resolutions?
The SPEAKER. Not as the Chair understands it, on the amendment. It will have to be voted upon as a whole.
The question was taken on the amendment; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let us have a division.
Pending the division,
Mr. PAYNE. Let us have the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment; and there were—yeas 150, nays 161, answered "present" 5, not voting 67, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks for a recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his request. Call my name.

The name of the Speaker was called, and he voted "nay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the resolutions proposed by the committee, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. George Howell was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth district of the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That Hon. William Connell was duly elected a Representative in the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth district of the State of Pennsylvania, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, as the resolutions contain two separate propositions, I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands a division. The question will then be upon the first resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. George Howell was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth district of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that we have already voted upon that proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask for the yeas and nays on the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The amendment offered by the minority covered both propositions. The amendment was not agreed to, and the question now recurs on the resolution as reported by the majority. Being two propositions, the gentleman from Mississippi demands a division. It seems to the Chair that he is entitled to a division, and the question is upon the first proposition, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. George Howell was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth district of the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Upon second thought, I will not call for the yeas and nays upon that proposition.

Mr. PAYNE. Upon second thought, I will call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 148, answered "present" 5, not voting 70, as follows:

Mr. MILLER with Mr. WILSON of New York.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER-ELECT.

William Connell, a Representative-elect from the Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, appeared before the bar of the House and took the oath prescribed by law.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 8, 1904:

H. R. 8686. An act to amend section 1895 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

On February 9, 1904:

H. R. 4344. An act for the relief of Vincenzo Gerardi, of Washington, D. C.

On February 10, 1904:

H. R. 8688. An act to transfer jurisdiction of reservation No. 32, in the city of Washington, D. C.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, and I ask, Mr. Speaker, before putting that motion, unanimous consent that all debate on the item now pending be closed at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that all debate upon item No. 10 be closed to-morrow at 2 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Indiana, or rather call his attention to the fact that the matter pending is the amendment to the Senate amendment which I offered, and the request, I think, should be that all debate on the Senate amendment and amendments thereto be closed at 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies his request, and the Chair understands he asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment and amendments to the amendment be closed to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Indiana means, if that request is granted, to limit all debate—general debate and debate under the five-minute rule—in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union when it considers this proposition? The committee has proceeded thus far as though we were having general debate. We have not had any debate up to this time under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the request is that all debate shall close at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will permit me, I have made inquiries of parties who are interested as to the time that would be necessary. Some of those in opposition to the item thought that an hour would be sufficient, and others thought two hours would be sufficient. So I ask unanimous consent that we might have two hours and forty-five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what division of time is proposed.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I should say the time should be equally divided between those in favor of the item and those in opposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the leader on this side, Mr. WILLIAMS, may control half of the time and the chairman of the committee the other half.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, no; let the gentleman from Georgia control it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask, then, that one-half of the time be controlled by the chairman of the committee and the other half by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], who is opposed to the item.

Mr. HEMENWAY. As far as I am concerned, if I should control the time, I should simply turn it over to the parties interested on the one side and the other of this amendment, so that the time will be equally divided between those who oppose and those who favor the amendment.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKETT. When we closed the consideration of this on Monday evening I had the floor and there was some time remaining to my credit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had twenty-six minutes remaining.

Mr. BURKETT. If this proposition is accepted, will I be entitled to that time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that unanimous consent referred to would cut the gentleman off unless he gets a new recognition. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. One moment, Mr. Speaker. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not insist on his request. This is not a matter that is divided by party lines. Those who are opposed to the proposition have taken most of the time on that side of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest that I thought there would be no difficulty in the way of an agreement, providing it is understood that the time will be equally divided between those in favor of the item and those opposed to it.

Mr. PAYNE. I think with that proposition there would be no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Georgia is to control the time in opposition because of his being a ranking minority member of the committee that reports in favor of it, I think the chairman ought to control the other half.

Mr. PAYNE. Suppose we leave that out and simply divide the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But who shall determine which gentleman is to have time?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put, I would like to get an agreement, for I think we can get one.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. CLAYTON. With the assurance of the leader on this side, Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, that we can probably get an agreement, Mr. Speaker, which the leader on the other side, Mr. PAYNE, was not able to do, I withdraw my request for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for closing the debate upon the amendment and the amendment to the amendment be fixed at 2 o'clock to-morrow, and that the time for debate be controlled by the Chair, the Chair to divide the time equally between those in favor and those opposed to the pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The motion of Mr. HEMENWAY was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman from Minnesota controls the time.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is true, Mr. Chairman, but I want to state that before that agreement was made, when it was proposed that the gentleman from Georgia and I would control the time, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] asked for the first recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not know, Mr. Chairman. I suppose I am recognized for an hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Under the agreement that was entered into just before we went into the committee, the division of the time was left with the Chair. Is it not possible for the Chair, under that agreement, to apportion out the time as the Chair sees fit and not give one full hour to any particular individual who is recognized?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I did not intend to occupy one hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not suppose the gentleman did, but I would like to get this thing settled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks he has that right. Of course the friends of the proposition are entitled to recognition now, and such time as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] consumes will be taken from their time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understood that, Mr. Chairman. I do not wish to curtail the gentleman at all, only I wanted it understood as to whether or not the Chair held that any gentleman who was recognized was recognized for an hour. If so, there could be only two gentlemen speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not hold that way, and in the future will limit the time.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to make an arrangement right now, if any gentleman on the other side wishes to talk, to divide the time we will consume this evening.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I will make a proposition myself. Let us take fifteen minutes at a clip on each side. That is perfectly fair, it seems to me. [Applause and laughter.] The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] wants more than that. He already has the floor. But after that time let it be divided so that each side will have fifteen minutes at a clip, and either toe the mark or quit talking.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Missouri, and with the consent of the gentleman from Missouri he would be glad to make that ruling.

Mr. COWHERD. I am perfectly willing. I suppose that would have to be by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, this proposition has already been debated at some considerable length, and I take it that the objections offered by the gentlemen who have opposed the measure cover the ground that will be taken by the opposition. If I rightly understand them, two arguments only are advanced against the measure—first, that the loan is unconstitutional, and, second, that St. Louis having already been the recipient of substantial favors should bear this burden herself. I want to say to the distinguished gentlemen who have raised the constitutional question that it seems to me they are talking about ten years too late, at least. Long ago this question was settled in the United States. When the great Chicago Exposition was held that matter was thrashed out on the floor of this House. Some of the ablest lawyers of the United States discussed it, and by an overwhelming majority Congress decided that it was constitutional, and that decision has stood until this day and has been repeated over and over again by the action of Congress upon similar appropriations.

If there was any question as to the constitutionality of this measure, I want to submit to the gentlemen here representing the various constituencies of all the States in the Union that this matter has been settled in another way that should at least offer some salve to the conscience of those who fear the Constitution is being violated. If it were desired to amend the Constitution, you would pass a resolution, submit it to the States, and when approved by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States it would become the highest law of the land. Forty-three out of the forty-five States of this Union have passed upon this proposition, and by their legislatures have said to you, their Representatives upon this floor, that they believe in the constitutionality of such an appropriation, and they likewise believe in the expediency of it; so I say to the gentlemen who question the constitutionality of the measure the very legislatures vested with the power to make constitutional law have approved such appropriations, and that should be sufficient to satisfy your quibbles.

It seems to me, therefore, that the constitutional argument must fade both because it is barred by limitation and because it is overridden by the will of the people of the United States expressed through the legislatures of the various States of the Union. Then, what remains of the objections to the granting of this appropriation? I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the first and foremost of all, the one that appealed most strongly to the gentlemen upon the floor, was the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who always makes the best speech that can be made upon any subject, and it little affects the quality of the speech whether it be on the right side or the wrong side of the subject. But was he fair in dealing with the great city that is here appealing for this aid? What was his argument, or the strongest portion of it? His contention was that, although St. Louis had done her part in putting up ten millions to the Government's five for the purpose of holding this national fair, although the need for more money admittedly came from the demand for additional space made largely by the foreign nations we had invited to exhibit there, although the management of the exposition company had been beyond criticism, yet he contended that $5,000,000 had been spent by that management in permanent improvements for the city of St. Louis, and therefore that city should advance the money needed to carry this national enterprise on to its full fruition.

Let us look at the facts and see on what this argument is based. The gentleman said first that the evidence shows that $3,000,000 has been spent there (as the chairman of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions said) "under the ground;" therefore the gentleman from Iowa assumed that it was for a sewerage system and a permanent improvement. Mark you, gentlemen, that exposition is to be held upon a portion of the great Forest

Park, of St. Louis, a park of 1,350 acres of ground, and when this park was turned over to the exposition company it was compelled to give a bond, a personal bond signed by the directors of that company, that when this exposition is over they will remove the buildings and restore the park to its original condition, fit for the purposes for which it was intended to be used.

Suppose you had $3,000,000 spent on sewerage there. I appeal to you whether it is not within the intelligence of any boy in any village of the United States who ever saw a park that you could not spend $3,000,000, or $1,000,000, or even one tithe of that amount in a sewerage system for Forest Park and make it a permanent improvement? What do you want with a sewerage system in a forest park? As a matter of fact, these gentlemen have got to take out the improvements that the gentleman from Iowa says are a permanent gain to the city of St. Louis.

This $3,000,000 was not spent for sewerage. A small portion went for that; a considerable portion was spent in laying the conduits for the millions of electric lights that are to flash there in myriad shape along the façades of those great buildings, beneath the dancing waters of the cascade, over all the grounds, delighting the eyes of the millions of people from all over the world who will come there. Are the conduits, carrying these innumerable wires, to be any permanent improvement to a forest park? Can you use those millions of lights when those exposition buildings are razed and the land turned back to the purpose for which it was originally intended—a park for the city? These temporary buildings had to be equipped with a costly system of water pipes to protect them from fire. When the buildings are razed will those standing pipes be a permanent improvement for a forest park in the city of St. Louis?

A large sum has been spent in paving, laying out avenues and courts, and building walks. When these buildings are torn down those highways and streets must be dug up; the material in them must be carted off, the place must be refilled, and the greensward must grow there to cover the scars that the demolition of these buildings will have left. Is that a permanent improvement for the city of St. Louis? Yet that was the great argument of the great debater of this House—the argument on which we are asked not to vote this loan. I admit that the Fine Arts Building will be a permanent structure—not for the advantage of St. Louis, but because they had to put up a fireproof structure in order to get the owners of those priceless treasures of art to lend them for exposition purposes.

Now, the only other buildings that are at all permanent in their nature were put on the Washington University grounds—put there because by building four buildings they got the use of nine for three years, with 100 acres of land, more cheaply than they could have erected the nine buildings of a temporary character.

So, as a matter of fact, the gentleman's contention of $5,000,000 spent in permanent improvements for the city of St. Louis dwindles to one art building—and that building had to be a fireproof structure in order to secure for that exposition the art treasures of the world.

I shall not follow the gentleman in his tirade against the city because of the increased price of labor. I heard the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Illinois argue here but a few days ago that the price of labor had increased all over the land, and because the St. Louis company had to meet that condition, as people engaged in building have had to meet it everywhere, he finds a reason to vote against this measure.

The fact is that this exposition company had to do its work within a specific time. If the cost of labor was raised somewhat by the fact that in that locality there was a great demand to be met within a short time, then labor did no more than the cotton growers of the South are doing to-day; no more than the wheat growers of the West and the cattle raisers of Texas will do next month if war in foreign countries increases the demand for their commodities.

The exposition company simply met a serious situation as fairly as they could in the spirit in which reasonable men would meet it anywhere, and they got the best terms possible for the smallest concession.

But it is said St. Louis has already profited by the expenditure of this money and must profit immensely in the future.

The city of St. Louis has appropriated $10,000,000—$5,000,000 from the city, $5,000,000 raised by its citizens. The city of St. Louis in addition to that has expended out of the funds of its citizens, drawn largely from its banks, $10,000,000 more in improvements in the city and improvements on the streets to get ready to act in fitting manner as the hostess of the nation to visitors from all the world.

I want to say here that no man who has ever studied the history of international expositions would ever ask that one of them be brought to his city with the idea that there was going to be an immediate commercial profit as distinguished from that which the advertisement might bring in the future. The great expositions have not been paying ventures to the cities that have held them, with possibly few exceptions. Paris is peculiarly situated. Paris is the one visiting point of all France, and every tourist and every traveler who touches the Continent or crosses the ocean goes to Paris, whether there is an exposition there or not. Therefore some of the Paris expositions have been successful. Yet even there some have not been successful as money-making enterprises. I think every man in this House who is a resident of the city of Chicago will bear me out in the statement that the great world's fair of 1893 was not a successful commercial enterprise for the city of Chicago. I have been told it was years before she recovered from the reaction which followed. These great expositions are beneficial commercial enterprises for the nation in which they are held, but for the city that bears the brunt of the burden in preparing for them; for the city that spends, as St. Louis does, $20,000,000 out of its own pocket to make ready for it; for the city that suffers, as every great city has suffered, from a building boom that builds beyond the present needs of the community and leaves its capital lying idle for the four or five years succeeding the exposition; for that city an exposition is as likely to prove a commercial disaster as a commercial success.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. I will ask that I have about three minutes more. I thought I had until a quarter to 5.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I excepted Mr. COWHERD especially from the fifteen-minutes arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. CLARK. I ask that the gentleman have ten minutes, to be taken out of our time.

Mr. COWHERD. Five minutes is all I care for.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, while I believe there is no question of the constitutional right to make appropriations for a national exposition, I do not believe we ought to appropriate for any exposition except one national in character.

I would be willing to see adopted a policy under which we would have in this country a great national exposition every fifteen or twenty years, to be held in some one of the great cities of the country large enough to accommodate the crowds that gather on such occasions, and would be willing to commit the Government to the policy of appropriating any reasonable sum for the purpose of fostering that exposition upon the condition that the city where it was to be held should raise double the amount appropriated by the Government, as has been done in the city of St. Louis. I do not believe, however, that any exposition local in its character or less than international in its scope is entitled to receive any consideration at the hands of Congress. Holding to this belief, I am not startled nor terrified when gentlemen talk of the magnitude of this appropriation. As I have said, it is in my opinion only those expositions of sufficient magnitude to demand a large appropriation that are entitled to our consideration.

The St. Louis Exposition is to be the greatest the world has ever seen, and that you may appreciate this fact, let me call your attention to some statistics I have gathered regarding former expositions that were considered of world-wide importance at the time when they were held.

I believe it is conceded that the first world's fair, in the proper sense of the term, was the one held in London in 1851, organized by Prince Albert, Queen Victoria's royal consort. And in my humble judgment that great man did nothing in the course of his exceedingly useful life that more entitled him to be held in the memory and affection of his people than the work he did in connection with that great exposition. It brought the nations of the earth nearer together and turned the steps of the English people toward those paths of peace in which his royal wife toiled for so many years to hold them.

This exposition was held in the Crystal Palace, erected for that purpose, which cost but $965,000 and occupied less than 8 acres of land. The Paris exposition of 1855 cost $5,000,000. London held a world's fair again in 1862, which covered 24 acres of ground and cost two million three hundred thousand. Paris in 1867 covered with its exposition buildings 45 acres of ground, with about 70 acres more used for agricultural and floral purposes. Vienna in 1873 occupied in total area of ground within its exposition fence 686 acres. The cost of the buildings was $7,850,000.

The Centennial, held at Philadelphia in 1876, inclosed within its fence 285 acres of ground. The cost I can not give accurately, but suppose it was about $4,000,000, because that was the amount contributed by the State and city, including the million and a half borrowed from the Government.

The Paris Exposition of 1889 occupied 173 acres of ground, with a total cost of $8,300,000. The Chicago Exposition of 1893 held under roof a space of 86 acres and inclosed within its fence 690 acres, with a total cost when it was opened of about $22,000,000.

At St. Louis this year there will be under roof 128 acres of ground, while the exposition grounds proper will cover 1,240 acres, about twice the area of the Chicago and as much as the Chicago, Paris, and Buffalo expositions combined.

From these figures one may derive some idea of the magnitude of the task that St. Louis has undertaken on behalf of the people of the United States. I do not agree with the gentlemen who contend that this is a waste of money. I believe that a great exposition, holding within itself an epitome of the highest industries of the people of the earth, bringing together the best products of hand and mind from all the nations of the earth to contend in friendly rivalry for the prizes offered, presenting to its visitors in the concrete the story of the world's progress and civilization—such an exposition I believe is the greatest education that the mind of man has yet conceived for the benefit of humanity. The country still feels the impetus that was given alike to our science and commerce by the great fair held in Chicago ten years ago. There is not a country village in all the land where architecture was not improved or encouraged and love of learning stimulated by that great exposition. I believe, too, that these expositions are a benefit not only commercially and from an educational standpoint, but that they promote comity among the nations of the earth and bring us nearer to that peace of which the angels sang above the manger at Bethlehem.

I believe that every dollar of this loan will be honestly accounted for and returned. I believe it is better, in the present condition of the money market, to take the money from the idle accumulation in the vault of the Treasury than to draw it from the active channels of trade. And I believe that every man who votes for this measure now, so that we may fittingly celebrate the centennial of the Louisiana purchase, the second greatest epoch in the history of the nation, will have the approval of his constituents to-day and their earnest congratulation when they view, this summer at St. Louis, that wondrous city, the fairest vision that was ever conceived by the mind of magician or wrought by the hand of artist from senseless stone and plaster into a thing of life and beauty. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to be drawn into this debate upon the proposed loan of $4,600,000 to the St. Louis Exposition, and I have asked for only five minutes on the question. I have no intention of making an extended speech on the subject, but as a member of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions I have thought it only proper to make two points in answer to the speech made by the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]. I would like to say in the first place that I yield to no man upon this floor in my admiration for this exposition company and for the magnificent work they are attempting. I hope with all my heart that this great exposition will be the success that its friends anticipate. But at the same time I can not allow the opportunity to pass to correct an impression of the gentleman from Minnesota, as stated in his speech, that all the members of our committee, even those who are opposed to the bill, are satisfied as to the security offered.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the management of this exposition company have come here to us and offered what they consider a business proposition. Under these circumstances it is unfair so to appeal to the House of Representatives as to stir up sentiment. We are appealed to as business men and not as sentimentalists. From that point of view I for one, as a member of this committee, am not satisfied that the United States will under all circumstances get back the $4,600,000 that we are now asked to lend this exposition company. To be sure, if the exposition is a success the Government will get this money back; if the exposition is a failure, we will not only fail to get our money back, but we will probably have the same gentlemen come here and ask us to make up the deficiency. In that sense we are invited to speculate.

Mr. Chairman, my objection is based also upon another ground. I am unable to see any warrant for calling this loan constitutional. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] who spoke last has referred to the constitutionality of this proposed loan as being based upon the action of almost all of the various State legislatures in appropriating funds of their respective States for State exhibitions at the exposition in St. Louis. That is not at all relevant to the question of the constitutionality of a proposition to have the United States lend money to the exposition company. We can not be convinced of that, nor do I know of any precedents which will warrant any such action on our part.

The United States has under the Constitution the right to gather this money by taxation and to appropriate it for any and every governmental purpose; but nowhere do I find any authority for the loan of this money to any corporation for any purpose.

Now, the gentleman from Minnesota has cited as a precedent for action on our part the action of the Congress of the United States in appropriating money as a pro forma loan to the Centennial Exposition in 1876. I say, gentlemen, much as I respect his judgment, that I do not consider that appropriation a loan. If you will allow me, I shall read a few words from the act appropriating the money for the Centennial Exposition. The act says:

That the sum of $1,500,000, to complete the centennial buildings and other preparations, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated. * * * Provided, That in the distribution of any moneys that may remain in the treasury of the centennial board of finance after the payment of its debts * * * the appropriation herein made shall be paid in full into the Treasury of the United States, before any dividend or percentage of the profits shall be paid to the holders of said stock.

Mr. Chairman, this seems to me to have placed the United States at that time, not in the position of a creditor, but of a preferred stockholder. In that sense they were practically upon the same footing as we are in our original appropriation of $5,000,000 to the St. Louis exposition. This entitles us to share in one-third of the profits there and then after the payment of all debts of the exposition company. The appropriation for the Centennial Exposition entitled the United States to be paid back their money after the payment of all debts and before the common stockholders, so to speak, received any dividend on their stock. In other words, I consider that this first appropriation was not a loan such as can now be cited as a precedent, but was distinctly an appropriation out and out, with the provision that under certain conditions the money should revert back to the United States. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, we all agree with the enthusiastic feelings of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] about the success of this fair. Nobody, whatever their views about this loan, has any question or any difference about that. I am sure, too, that every Member of this side of the House enjoyed the novel constitutional argument of the gentleman from Missouri, and I am sure we will be in the future very apt to refer to it and commend it to his associates.

But it seems to me that the argument which is made in favor of this appropriation is a severe indictment of the gentlemen who are managing this fair. We are told that they need this $4,600,000 in order to open the fair successfully. We are told all the nations of the world have been invited to come here, and if we do not give this money we will be disgraced, because the fair can not be properly opened. If that is so, Mr. Chairman, if the gentlemen who are managing this exposition have been so improvident, so reckless, so shortsighted; if they, knowing what money they had, knowing what work they had to do, knowing its scope, having the duty of calculating its probable growth and shaping their resources accordingly, have expended all their funds and exhausted all their credit before they are able to even open the fair, then I think they have been reckless and improvident; and if the nations of the world and the monarchs who have been invited should come here and find no fair, it is not the Congress of the United States or the people of the United States who will in the first instance be disgraced, but it is the management of this fair.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was expresly stated both on the floor——

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I only yielded for a question, as I have only ten minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman know that the plan originally contemplated involved an expenditure of only $15,000,000, the amount which they had, and this additional expenditure is the result of increased space demanded by foreign nations and by States which was not contemplated and could not be contemplated at the time the expenditure started?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, that does not affect the argument at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. It affects the question of extravagance, however.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. These gentlemen knew all the time what they had to do. They knew what applications were coming in, and if they did not have money enough and could not see how to get money enough to meet them they ought to have refused them. It was their duty to make their resources and their expenditures balance. They were not given indefinite authority to contract for anything they wished, and they had no business to enter into obligations unless they had some means of meeting them. They would not do it in their own business affairs, and any man who enters into an obligation and does not have some idea how he is going to meet it except by applying for charity, as they are doing here, is wholly lacking in business judgment.

Mr. SCUDDER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I can not yield.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe at all that these gentlemen are so improvident, so reckless as the advocates for this appropriation would have us think. I do not believe this argument which is made in their favor is genuine. I know the gentlemen, many of them, and I have a great respect and admiration for them. I believe that this fair has thus far been managed with remarkable ability, energy, and enterprise. I believe the gentlemen who are managing it are farsighted; I believe that those nine gentlemen representing the United States are not simply ornamental, although they are certainly that; I believe they are useful, and I believe that this management has not gone recklessly on and expended all their money and exhausted all their credit so that they can not open this fair unless the United States Treasury is opened to them. I believe they know, if they do not get this money from us, where they can get it. I notice that a gentleman said on the floor of the House that they had made no requests elsewhere for this money.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that is a mistake. I believe these gentlemen have business foresight, and I believe before they would be left entirely without funds to open this fair they would provide some avenue where they could replenish their exchequer in case the United States Congress does not grant them what they want. If this bill is really the only resource to prevent bankruptcy, if they say they have no other method of getting this money, if they have gone forward and spent all their money and exhausted all their credit without knowing where they are going to get enough to open the fair respectably, if they have come to the end of their resources and are really butting their heads against the wall of bankruptcy, I say this amendment ought to have on it a condition that they should resign and that business men of foresight should have the expenditure of this four million and a half dollars who would cut their garment according to their cloth. But I do not believe that any such condition exists. I believe they can get this money elsewhere, and they know where they can get it. I believe, and I know, that they are men of sagacity and ability, and that they have not come here because this is their only refuge from insolvency. They can borrow it as Chicago did, but of course they come first to the United States Congress. I do not blame them. Everybody does the same. We are easy. They would like to get the money without paying interest. They would like to get the money without any obligation, so that in a case of conflagration or pestilence they or their friends are not the losers. But it is not a fair business proposition. I think we ought to stand by what we have already done.

And I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that it excites my indignation the way men come and get one appropriation from Congress on the express statement that that is all they will ask, and then come again before a great while and because we have given some make that very fact the ground for demanding more. I think we ought to stop it. There seems to be something connected with all these exhibitions that rather demoralizes us. I do not know of any cases in my Congressional career where votes have been cast so much from personal feeling and so little because of the merits of the proposition as on these fairs. It seems to me that there has been more rounding up of Members, not upon the merits of the question, but from friendship and good-fellowship, in these matters than any other. I think it ought to stop. It is hard for us to have colleagues come right to us and press us to vote for their bill and refuse it. And yet the danger of it is that it involves not simply the bill that we pass, but it carries behind it a whole train of other bills.

It demoralizes our sentiments; it gets us in the habit of voting for questions, not on their merits, not because they are right, but because there is a lobby right on the floor of Members constantly besieging and begging us to vote. Moreover, it leads not only to that one vote, but we know that other votes depend upon it, and that men vote for one measure not because they approve it, but because somebody has voted for their measure. I read recently, and I presume you all have, that a Member of Congress said he believed that the law was unconstitutional, and he thought it was illegal, but that he should vote for it because he voted for the bill for his own State, which he thought was also unconstitutional and illegal, and got his "steal," and therefore he felt, as a matter of reciprocity, that he must vote for succeeding "steals."

That was expressed in rather more frank and brutal language than we often hear, but we all know that trouble pervades all these measures. Now, I think in this case, when we all know what was said at the beginning, that they would make no further request, it is audacious for them to come and ask for more; it is unbusinesslike, and we are setting an exceedingly bad precedent. Whether you get the money back again or not nobody knows; but I do not think we ought to give the aid asked, because I believe the energetic and sagacious men who are running this fair know where they can get the money and that they ought to keep their faith and borrow it as a business transaction and stand by their original proposition to be satisfied with the first generous appropriation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10954, the urgent deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. That is now a Senate resolution?

Mr. PLATT of New York. It is a Senate resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is rather a peculiar resolution. It appears to be a Senate resolution, and it provides for printing 1,000 copies for the House of Representatives.

Mr. CULLOM. I think, if the Senator from New York will allow me to make a suggestion, that the provision for printing a certain number of copies for the House of Representatives had better be dropped out.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am entirely satisfied to have it dropped out.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that evidently the printing will cost over $500. The Senate has no right to order the publication of a work costing over that sum, and it should be made a concurrent resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not want the delay of a concurrent resolution or the uncertainty of its passage. I think, if the provision in reference to printing copies for the House is dropped out, it will be unnecessary to make it anything except a Senate resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Can 500 copies be printed for $500?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no doubt that it can.

Mr. COCKRELL. I doubt it very seriously.

Mr. PLATT of New York. It can be printed for less than $500.

Mr. GALLINGER. Most of the matter is in plates now.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest that the resolution be amended by striking out the portion which provides for printing for the House.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "one thousand for the use of the House of Representatives and."

Mr. GALLINGER. And strike out "fifteen hundred" and substitute "five hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That a revised edition of "The Compilation of Treaties in Force" be prepared, under the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that there be inserted in said revised edition all treaties proclaimed and in force at the end of the present session; and that there shall be printed 500 copies of said revised edition for the use of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. That will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

SHIP CANAL ACROSS FLORIDA.

Mr. MALLORY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2808) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause a survey or surveys to be made to determine the practicability and cost of a tidewater ship canal across the State of Florida, to report it adversely, and to report in lieu thereof a concurrent resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a survey or surveys to be made across the State of Florida from the Atlantic Ocean to the Gulf of Mexico, using such natural water courses as may be available, with a view to determining upon the most practicable route for a ship canal of tide-water level between the waters of the Atlantic Ocean and the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and the feasibility and cost of constructing such canal of sufficient capacity for the largest ocean-going ships; and he is directed further to report fully to Congress thereupon as early as practicable after such survey or surveys have been completed.

That the sum of $25,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of such survey or surveys.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it a Senate resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a concurrent resolution, but it contains an appropriation, and of course it can not be a concurrent resolution. Does the Senator from Florida desire to have it changed to a joint resolution?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir; I ask that that change be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be changed to a joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. R. 47) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause a survey or surveys to be made to determine the practicability and cost of a tide-water ship canal across the State of Florida was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 2803 will be postponed indefinitely.

WILMINGTON (DEL.) HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. BALL, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the Wilmington Harbor, Delaware (including the Christiana and Brandywine rivers), with the view to their improvement and to insure the permanency of the channel in the Christiana River to the depth of at least 21 feet.

BRUNSWICK (GA.) HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. CLAY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3924) for survey and estimate of cost of deepening Brunswick (Ga.) inner harbor and outer bar, to report it adversely; and in lieu thereof I report a concurrent resolution, which I ask may be adopted.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., and of the inner harbor of Brunswick, Ga., and to furnish therefrom estimates showing the cost of obtaining a channel of ample width to accommodate the commerce of said port, and extending from the wharves in said inner harbor, through said outer bar, to the ocean, and of the following depths at mean high tide, to wit, 27 feet, 28 feet, 29 feet, and 30 feet; that is to say, the Secretary of War is directed to furnish a separate estimate of the cost of obtaining a channel at each of said depths; and the Secretary of War is hereby further directed to report whether or not in his opinion it is advisable, if these increased depths, or any one or more of them, shall be obtained, that the present channel across said outer bar should be straightened.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 3924 will be postponed indefinitely.

THURSDAY, February 11, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 12220) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, which was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (S. 2345) to make applicable the provisions of the naturalization laws of the United States to Porto Rico, and for other purposes, was changed from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. SHULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. George Howell be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD. That request was made yesterday, but I think the Speaker did not understand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that Mr. Howell be granted the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I desire to say that there are a great many gentlemen on this side of the House who would like to speak for a few moments in favor of this proposition. It will be impossible for them to do so unless the time can be extended. I have been requested to ask unanimous consent that the time for taking the vote be fixed at 2.30 instead of at 2 o'clock, and that the time be divided equally between the two sides, and I make that request at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, pending the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, asks unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended until 2.30 p. m., the time to be divided equally between those in favor and those opposed to the amendments under discussion. Is there objection?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am advised that there are several gentlemen who expect to be absent from the House shortly after 2 o'clock. I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa objects. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I believe that Congress ought to adopt a different policy from that heretofore pursued in relation to the question of expositions. It seems to me that the proper policy for Congress to pursue is to make one exposition a national affair about once in each generation, and to withhold appropriations from the public fund for all expositions that are essentially local in their character. Too much money has been wasted in appropriations to aid local expositions. They are too frequent to have a national interest, and Federal aid ought to be withheld from them excepting, perhaps, a sufficient amount to make a proper Federal exhibit. The Federal Government ought to pursue the same policy toward them as is pursued by the several States, aside from the one in which they are held. But the Louisiana Purchase Exposition is essentially a national enterprise.

It is not local beyond the element of habitation. Of course all expositions must be located somewhere; but that enterprise has been nationalized by action of Congress by making the appropriation of $5,000,000 in the first instance and by the creation of a commission to act as an advisory board in respect to the installation and management of the institution.

The question of the constitutionality of the proposed legislation has been raised during this discussion. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that there is anything at all in that question. If Congress had the power in the first instance to appropriate $5,000,000 toward promoting the enterprise, it has the power now to appropriate $4,600,000 to promote the same end. The only distinction between the two appropriations is that the present one is not a donation and adequate provision is made for the return of the money to the public Treasury, and I respectfully submit that that element does not make it unconstitutional.

The power to appropriate—the power to donate, if you please—carries with it the power to make a loan; and I repeat, this has come to be a national enterprise.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman think that the first appropriation for this object makes the second one constitutional?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not discussing the relative constitutionality of these appropriations. They are in line with appropriations that have been made by every Congress for perhaps the last fifty years. It is not a constitutional function of the Federal Government to bestow benefactions or to administer charities; yet it is a frequent thing for Congress to vote money out of the Federal Treasury for such objects. It is not in line with appropriations carrying out express constitutional functions of the Federal Government, but Congress has unlimited discretion in determining what objects are proper for the expenditure of public money.

Mr. Chairman, it was originally contemplated that this enterprise could be made a complete success with the sum of $15,000,000. But during the process of its construction and development it has become evident that it will require a greater amount of money.

Such has been the demand for space and privileges that it has expanded and developed into a much larger affair than its promoters originally dreamed would be possible. The question now before the House is, Shall the undertaking be made a splendid, complete success? There is no doubt that it will be a creditable affair, even if the Federal Government refuses to appropriate or to loan a single additional dollar to the undertaking. But can the people of this country, who all have a pride in this great institution, afford to permit only a partial or moderate success? There will be collected at this exposition the best intellect, the best enterprise, the most splendid genius of the civilized world; and the prestige of this great country will in some respects be measured by the display that will be made at this mighty gathering.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] criticised the proposition on the ground that this is a local affair. He said that the people of St. Louis ought to bear this additional expense, ought to be required to provide the necessary funds. What have the people of St. Louis already done? They have put into the enterprise $10,000,000, aside from the expenditure of almost an equal amount in putting their municipal household in order that they may creditably receive the people of the United States and the representatives of the arts and industries from all parts of the civilized world. They have expended $10,000,000 directly, and that amounts, according to the census of 1900, to $16 for every man, woman, and child within that city; it amounts to about $75 for every man 21 years of age or upward within that city.

The Federal Government, whose enterprise this is, has already appropriated $5,000,000. That amounts to 6¼ cents per capita of all the people in the country; and if we loan this additional $4,600,000, our constituents will have to expend less than 12½ cents per capita by reason of this appropriation, while St. Louis has already put into the enterprise, an essentially national enterprise, $16 per capita from her own citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I have examined the amendment with a good deal of care; and I have no doubt that it provides a valid, legal lien in favor of the Federal Government upon the gross receipts of the exposition; and under the operation of the amendment, when adopted, it will be the imperative duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, in the event that the managers of the enterprise fail to make the payments provided for, to insist upon a supervision of the collection of the gate receipts and the application of the money toward the payment of this loan.

Even if this were an absolute gift, if I regarded it as necessary for the complete success of this great undertaking, I should vote for it. But I believe this appropriation to be only a loan; and I have no doubt that every single dollar of it will be paid—that adequate security has already been provided, so that the loan is amply and abundantly safeguarded.

The question, Mr. Chairman, is: Shall the Federal Government add this mere pittance to the burdens of the people of the country in order to make a complete success of this enterprise, or shall we remit the question to the city of St. Louis, whose people have already been taxed so heavily to promote this common undertaking?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allotted to me it is impossible to meet the various objections which have been raised to the pending proposition or to do simple justice to its real merits. Therefore, I shall not stop to inquire into the constitutional objections which have found expression on this floor, nor shall I attempt to answer those who haughtily find fault with the efforts of the friends of the amendment to secure votes for its adoption. Nor will I even occupy my time with those who are busily engaged to defeat it because of personal grievances and disappointments. I merely want to call attention to the inconsistency of all these wise critics who, while fondling the child and admiring its beauty and praising its parents, are about to clutch its throat and strangle it to death.

Certain it is, Mr. Chairman, that we shall not have attained to the height of national development and civilization of which we are wont to boast until expenditures for a universal exposition to be held on American soil will be regarded just as legitimate under our Constitution and laws as the expenditures for armies and navies and for war purposes. Fortunately, and to the credit and glory of our institutions and of the framers of the Constitution, be it said that there is nothing in that great charter which could be so construed as to prohibit a function such as we here ask the Government to exercise.

We have no national university. We have no national theater. We do not endow any institution of learning except West Point and Annapolis, where the picked youth of the land are being trained and drilled in the arts of war. What, I ask, are we doing as a Congress, a Government, and a nation for the arts of peace? What are we doing to prevent war? What are we doing for the cause of international arbitration? What are we doing to encourage the sciences, the arts, and the industries? What are we doing to stimulate, by peaceful rivalry of our Commonwealths and by comparisons with other nations, the latent forces of American genius? Nothing, except it be by Uncle Sam extending his aid to and thus lightening the burdens, the responsibilities, and the sacrifices of those who are engaged in organizing and inaugurating for the benefit of the whole country that gigantic undertaking, the world's fair of 1904. This, if any constituent should ask the question, is the real justification for our affirmative vote on the original appropriation as well as on this temporary loan.

It has been suggested on this floor by no less a person than the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HEPBURN—and never has his eloquence been made to serve a more uncharitable cause—that the city of St. Louis assume the additional burden. No one who is at all familiar with the sacrifices already made by that city will seriously advance such a proposition. Shall I recount them? We first raised $5,000,000 by individual subscription. Have you a realizing sense of the enormity of this task? If in your communities and cities you have ever attempted to raise, for any charitable or public purpose, an amount equivalent to a contribution of $8 from every man, woman, and child, then you know, and not until then, what it means to collect $100,000 fifty times over. But that is not all, Mr. Chairman. The municipality then taxed the property of its citizens to the extent of $5,000,000 more, and in addition to that more than ten millions have been invested by our citizens in street improvements, new hotels, and other enterprises in connection with the fair.

This makes a grand total, raised in one single American city, of over $20,000,000, or $32 to each head of the population. Is there an example in history of public spirit, civic pride, and patriotism to equal this? And, gentlemen, this does not exhaust the sacrifices made by my city upon the altar of the nation. She has given up her largest and most beautiful park, which in area is second only to Fairmount Park in Philadelphia, for this great national purpose. A forest was cut down which can not be replaced in an hundred years. Superb trees, whose mighty crowns looked down as mute but approving witnesses upon the very beginnings of our national life, upon the transfer of Louisiana Territory and upon the first log houses which marked the site where the great metropolis of the Mississippi Valley now stands, were cut down to make room for the execution of the nation's mandate. All the money in the Treasury could not repay our citizens for the loss of this beautiful forest and for what they have thus freely given to the country and the world. And can you estimate in dollars and cents the sum total of energy and time which the unpaid high officials of the exposition company and the hundred prominent citizens of St. Louis who compose the board of directors have expended for years to make the fair a success, their only compensation being the thought that they were engaged in an effort which would redound to the credit and glory of their country? Instead of criticism and censure, these gentlemen, it seems to me, deserve the highest approbation.

We are no beggars. When, a few years ago, in the district which I have the honor to represent, nearly 8,000 houses were partially or wholly destroyed by a cyclone causing a calamity as great as the appalling loss of property at Baltimore, we did not hold out our hands either to the nation or to individuals, but declined all outside aid and helped ourselves. This example of local pride demonstrates to the satisfaction, I hope, of every fair-minded man on this floor that if it was in our power we would surely help ourselves in this instance. And if Congress, after due deliberation, should refuse to aid us, though the Government itself is known to be a partner in the concern, could anyone name a private banker that would?

Fifty-four foreign governments are participants in the fair with exhibits and structures and an expenditure of over $10,000,000. The representatives of all nations, races, and creeds are now getting ready to comply with the invitation extended to them by the President of the United States upon the authority of the Congress. What if to-day the news were flashed across the oceans that the American Congress has refused even a temporary advance to make possible the completion of the exposition and the opening of the doors at the specified time? Would it exonerate the American Government and people in the eyes of the civilized world, even if all the criticism you heap upon the exposition management were deserved and just? God forbid such a disgrace and humiliation!

All these reasons, Mr. Chairman, which impel me, as the representative of a St. Louis constituency, to vote for this amendment, appeal with equal force to the representative of every other constituency, because, let us repeat it again and again, it is not a St. Louis or a Missouri fair. It belongs as much to Maine and California, to Texas and Michigan, as it does to my city and State. It is an exposition authorized by and carried on under the auspices of the Government of the United States, and its success is consequently the concern of every American citizen. And who has profited from it so far? Why, over 90 per cent of the timber required for the nineteen great exhibit palaces and the countless other structures have been furnished by the Southern States; twenty Commonwealths are interested in the building contracts, and nearly the whole Union has contributed material, labor, and experts for the great undertaking.

Mr. Chairman, we have gloried in the evidences of a reunited country when the Spanish war broke out, but the great work of peace organized at St. Louis will demonstrate more emphatically and more beautifully the idea of one common country and a union indissoluble and inseparable, because all sections and elements of our population have a common interest in it, and all are contributing the results of their best endeavors in every field of human activity.

We marvel at the magnificent structures of ancient Greece and Rome, and in beholding their ruins to-day we are bound to reverently acknowledge the public spirit which was the inspiring motive of their construction. Let the United States in 1904 give evidence to the world that the same public spirit actuates the people of this Republic; that it is born of and a necessary corollary of our free institutions, and do not let this House by its vote to-day veto the proposition that this lesson, this message to the world, shall be the crowning glory of the universal exposition of 1904. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HINSHAW] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this appropriation for several reasons. One reason is that the last Congress has already appropriated something like $6,000,000 in aid of this project, which is certainly ample, and the exposition should have kept within the bounds of that appropriation. I am opposed to it further because this appropriation, if made, in my judgment, will not be a loan, but will be a gift, and before this session expires, or at the next session, this Commission will come back here and ask for a further appropriation for deficiencies.

I would suggest that instead of spending this money in this manner it should be appropriated for more useful purposes. I know how well the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HEMENWAY] and the other members of his committee have sought to hold down the appropriations in this Congress. They have made a splendid effort in that direction. I know how well the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], chairman of the Post-Office Committee, has attempted to hold in proper check the appropriations through his committee.

I know the wonderful onslaught that has been made upon the Post-Office Committee for necessary appropriations in the line of rural free delivery, and I want to say to you that it is of more importance that this Congress should do something toward properly compensating the 20,000 rural carriers of this country, who are not adequately paid, than it is to give this money to the exposition at St. Louis. The amount proposed to be expended here would pay our 20,000 carriers $225 per year additional to what they now receive. They are the most poorly paid men in the service of the United States. This appropriation would give them almost a sufficient amount for two years to come in the way of additional pay, which they so sorely need all over this country. Nothing projected by the American Congress has so come home to the hearts of the people of this country as the rural carrier service. It is a more beneficent thing, it is a greater thing for education, than the St. Louis exposition. Nor do I believe that the St. Louis exposition will be crippled in any manner by the failure of this Congress to make this appropriation.

As the gentleman from Indiana has said, it will be a creditable showing in any event. It has received money enough. There are other purposes for which this money could be more beneficently used. There have been introduced into this Congress a large number of bills for the purpose of giving service pensions to the soldiers of this Republic. I know how well the Speaker of this House has sought to curtail appropriations. I think he is doing a splendid service in that regard, but there is a great demand all over this country for additional appropriations for soldiers of this Republic who have not been adequately cared for by the Pension Bureau of this great Government, and I would say to you that it would be a better thing if this four and one-half million dollars should be given to the soldiers of the nation who so bravely served in the war of the rebellion than to give it for this purpose.

We shall soon be called upon to appropriate $10,000,000 to pay the Panama Republic the money going to that Republic for the Panama Canal. The sum of $40,000,000 more will be paid to the French company to extinguish their title to this property. I say this money would better be applied to the partial payment of this $50,000,000 than for this purpose.

It seems to me that this money is needed in a thousand ways, in far more urgent matters than for the expansion of this already large appropriation. I can not support this measure because I believe the money would be improvidently expended. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, in the short time that I shall take I shall not discuss the constitutional phase of this question. I will say, however, in reference to this, that if it is not unconstitutional it ought to be unconstitutional. I want to say in the beginning that there is no one here, I take it, disposed in any way to cripple the St. Louis Exposition. There is no one but wants it to go on and be the great success that it promises and that we hope it will be; and if anyone will read the hearings before the committee in reference to this exposition he will find that it is going on whether this appropriation is made or not.

The question sifts itself simply down to this proposition: Are we going to loan them money without interest from the Government Treasury, or are they to go somewhere else, into the money markets, and borrow $4,600,000, the same as Buffalo did, the same as Chicago did, and the same as all the other expositions have done?

The exposition is not in peril, as the officers themselves say. The question is only, Where shall they get the money they now need, of the Government or of private parties? They can not come to us and say they can not do this, for they have told us how much more ground they have, and how many more of exhibits they will have, and how much greater the exposition is going to be in every particular than any heretofore. Take the case of the other expositions. Chicago borrowed $5,000,000 in 1893, and certainly the conditions are better for borrowing money now than they were then. Buffalo borrowed $2,000,000 with which carry out their exposition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask this question of every Member on this floor who has received a telegram to-day—and all these telegrams have been one way, of course—and let me say this proposition has seemed to have behind it not only a most gigantic lobby, but also a very energetic one. From all sections of the country paid telegrams have been sent in here telling us how to vote on this proposition. Now, the question is: Have you heard from all the people of your district who are interested in the proposition of where the money from our Federal Treasury is going to? I have here their estimation of the population of the United States at 84,000,000 of people, as given by the president of the exposition in his remarks before the committee. There are 84,000,000 of people that are going to pay this $4,600,000 we are asked to appropriate. According to their estimation only one in eighteen of all the total population of the United States is going to attend this exposition. That is their estimate, made under conditions that favored their making it as large as possible. They estimate that 5,000,000 people will attend this exposition that 84,000,000 people will pay for.

Now, the question comes, Whose money are we using, and who are we using it for? Is it not our duty to consider the 84,000,000 people interested in this question who pay the taxes that make up this stupendous fund, rather than the few who are interested in St. Louis?

Now, I took up the statistics in reference to the different expositions that have been held in this country, and I want to call the attention of the committee to them, for the figures are significant. They show the enormity of this proposition, for to all the other expositions we have ever held in this country the Congress has appropriated $10,650,937—for all of them put together! This St. Louis Exposition has already had given to it by Congress $6,483,000. This, together with the $4,600,000 now asked for, will make a total of $11,083,000 for this one exposition! Compare now, if you will. All other expositions heretofore have had altogether $10,650,937. St. Louis, if this bill goes through, will have $11,083,000. I want to show the stupendous amount of nerve it requires, or perhaps gall, for a community to come in here, after having been so liberally treated as the people of St. Louis have been by Congress, and ask us further to put up an additional $4,600,000.

I can not quite accept all that has been said with reference to the frugality and economy in the conduct of matters down there. As brought out by the gentleman from Iowa, $5,000,000 of the expenditures already made goes for permanent improvements, benefiting the people of St. Louis. On looking over the report of the United States Commission I found out some more things that they had spent money for that, perhaps, may be interesting and that has resulted to the benefit of that city alone. They say that the whole world is anxious to come here to St. Louis to celebrate this great event. They speak of it as a great patriotic duty that St. Louis has had imposed upon her of caring for this exposition. They tell of the sacrifices that St. Louis has made for the benefit of the world and mankind and that all men and all nations and all States are interested. Let me tell you just how interested they are. Let me tell you of that anxiety from their own statement.

They have taken nation after nation and State after State by the very throat, as it were, and dragged them into the proposition from the beginning. No such gigantic scheme of promotion has ever been undertaken, it may be said to their credit as promoters of this fair. They began by calling the governors of various States together, as has been stated, and from that time to this the cost of exploitation has been an enormous one. Five hundred and forty-eight thousand four hundred and seventy-eight dollars and twenty-three cents so far has been paid out for the exploitation of this St. Louis Exposition. They have been lobbying the world in the interest of this exposition and it has cost that amount. Do not lay the responsibility on the world or on the States or the National Government. It originated in St. Louis, and it has taken three years and more than half a million dollars to get the rest of the world interested. Last spring $219,608.82 was spent in the dedication of these exposition grounds out there. Does the committee disclose what right they had to spend the money appropriated for the exposition for dedicatory exercises that resulted only in bringing crowds to St. Louis and thus redounding to her benefit? Sir, it was not given for such things as entertainments and bringing people to St. Louis. Two hundred and nineteen thousand dollars and over of the money which we appropriated went for the dedication of the grounds last spring.

In this same report of the Commission I find that they paid out as a preliminary expense $34,314.28. They paid out in one sum, as shown in this report, for entertainment of guests $18,312.62; for other ceremonies they have paid out $14,137.68, making a total in exploitation, dedications, entertainments, and miscellaneous ceremonies there of $834,851.63. And now they come in here with empty pockets, with an impoverished treasury. I should think their treasury would be empty. And now, after that enormous and preposterous expenditure, they ask this Congress to appropriate out of the people's money $4,600,000 to carry on that same sort of régime and that same class of expenditures.

I want to say to you, as has been suggested, that there are public buildings required in this country that we are unable to build. I remember that there are four post-offices in this country that have been brought to our attention where the people are walking from the first floor to the fourth floor and the fifth floor because we have thought we did not have money enough to build elevators to take the people up. I remember the condition of the post-office at Los Angeles, and we know the condition over in New York City. We know the demands the rural free-delivery carriers are presenting to us, and I have hoped their bill could be passed and their salaries raised as they ask, but we are met with the proposition and we had it told to us so eloquently when this bill was first taken up by the chairman of the Appropriation Committee that we must be economical in this session of Congress or we would have a deficiency in the Treasury confronting us.

I ask you, how are you going to meet your people when you go home? How will you meet the patrons of rural free delivery and others interested in the extension of that splendid service? What will you say to the rural carriers if their salaries are not made adequate and just? We are informed that it has been decreed that no river and harbor appropriations will be made this session because the watchword is economy. The people of the West are anxious that a couple of hundred thousand dollars or more be expended to take snags out of the Missouri River and to protect its banks, in order that we might have a great waterway from the Dakotas down by St. Louis to the Gulf of Mexico and out to the sea in that way, and also that millions of dollars of property may be saved from being washed away. We are met with the proposition that the Government has not sufficient funds, and it can not undertake to open that great interstate highway because we must be economical.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BURKETT. I can not yield; my time is so limited. There is another exposition to occur out across the continent, in the western portion of this country, and we will be met with the same proposition when it comes in the House. How are you going to excuse yourselves to your people when you can not get an appropriation for more than a Government building and an exhibit for your exposition out there when you have appropriated $11,000,000 and over of the money of the Treasury in this country for this exposition in St. Louis? Yet, sir, in my judgment, if this appropriation goes through the Lewis and Clark Exposition will be cut off with very little appropriation. I say it is too big; it is too large; it is preposterous to ask the representatives of the people to pay out this money in the face of all that confronts us.

Only this morning I received a letter, as I presume many of you have received similar ones, calling my attention to the fact that the experiment stations at the agricultural colleges of the various States of the Union were asking for a little more money in order that they might broaden their experiments in agriculture, so as to be of more benefit to the farmers, and yet we are told all along the line, in the agricultural bill, in all the appropriation bills that have come in, that we must cut down all these expenses, that we must limit these expenditures to the minimum. Why? Because we will have a deficiency in the Treasury, as the chairman of the Appropriations Committee said.

We have been taught this economy by the great leaders of the House; we have been taught to be careful and conservative in our disposition of the public funds. I say it is a wrong time now to change front. It is a question that is bound to come home to every one of us. It is your welfare, and the people's welfare. This four and one-half millions would build a public building in every Congressional district in this country. We want one in my district, and almost every one of your districts needs one and ought to have it, and yet we have heard that we can not have a public-building bill, because we must be economical, and yet at the same time we are asked to vote to appropriate more than $11,000,000 for one place, one locality. Gentlemen, it is too large; it is too much to ask of us. Congress has already been liberal beyond measure. Let St. Louis put her shoulder to the wheel and take care of the remainder.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am much obliged to the gentleman from Nebraska for this opportunity. For the past eight years it has been said to us by men in whom we have confidence in this House that we are the trustees of the people's money. There is not a court in the United States that would not be impeached if it authorized a trustee to make a loan of the money in his hands belonging to another upon such security as is offered by this bill. It is admitted by the chairman of this commission that this money can not be borrowed except security is offered, unless it is borrowed from the United States. The admission is made by him in his printed statement that unless this Government takes this risk and loans money upon which no security is offered it can not be borrowed unless private security is given.

This Government has been induced to go into the show business at St. Louis. There are three parties to the agreement: St. Louis is one, the Government of the United States is another, and a corporation is a third. And yet the city of St. Louis and this corporation have the effrontery to ask this Government to loan all this money upon no security whatever. I submit to the people who advocate this loan that it is but fair toward our Government, and toward our Treasury, and toward the interests we have obligated ourselves to keep, that each one should loan one-third of the money; that if we have an interest equal to one-third the Government should not be called upon to loan more than one-third of the money necessary to pay present indebtedness and discharge that of the future.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the figures show that four million and a half dollars will not pay the expenses incurred and yet to be incurred to enable this great exposition to open without debt or liability. Forty millions of dollars will be the expenditure. The different appropriations made by all parties and institutions interested amount to but $33,000,000. If the appropriation asked for here should pass, there will yet remain unpaid $2,400,000 when the gates of this show open. Where is the balance to come from? The question has not been answered; and, furthermore, the information has been refused by the chairman of this exposition corporation. The chairman of the St. Louis exposition has neglected to submit to this House the information what the expenses amount to and to whom disbursements have been paid. No prudent person lives, Mr. Chairman, who would make a loan upon any such security as that offered here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, three objections have been made to the Senate amendment with reference to the St. Louis Exposition. First, that it authorizes a loan and that the Government has no legal right to make a loan; second, that the security is inadequate; third, that there are no sufficient reasons for making the loan. It is indeed strange that at this late day it should be asserted that the Government of the United States has no legal authority to make a loan. In the first Administration under the Constitution the Government entered upon a policy of loaning money to banks, and specifically to the United States Bank. A few years rolled away, and after elaborate arguments upon the constitutional questions involved, this Government loaned $28,000,000 to the States of this Union. After the establishment of the present system of national banks, the Government of the United States entered upon a policy of loaning money to those banks, and to-day has $160,000,000 so loaned to them.

At the time of the construction of the transcontinental railways the Government loaned to those railways the bonds of the United States. Surely if it can loan bonds it can loan money.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In view of the brief time I have, I do not wish to be interrupted now. After I get through, if there is any time remaining, I will be happy to answer questions.

In 1876, when the first international exposition was given in this country, the entire aid furnished to Philadelphia was a loan, and nothing but a loan. This Government has proceeded upon the policy of making loans for various purposes, from the Administration of George Washington until this hour. [Applause.] It is therefore a strange doctrine to hear preached now that there is no power in the Government of the United States to make loans.

I admit that I have not sufficiently fine reasoning faculties to be able to understand the proposition that this Government can advance money to expositions to be kept forever, but has not the constitutional power to advance money to exhibitions to be returned. The distinction in a constitutional sense is too refined for me to comprehend.

I turn, then, to the question, Is this loan reasonably safe? I want to call attention in that connection to some of the figures with reference to the Chicago Exposition. I have here a telegram from the auditor of the Chicago Exposition, from which it appears that the receipts from that exposition, exclusive of the after-exposition admissions and of wreckage, were $14,195,645. That the entire expense of carrying on the exposition, from the day it opened until it closed, was $3,471,000, leaving net receipts of $10,734,440 for distribution to pay the debts of the corporation and dividends to the stockholders of the corporation.

By reason of that fact the Chicago Exposition succeeded in paying a bonded and floating indebtedness upon it at the day it was opened of $9,268,358. It has paid $1,086,000 in dividends to its stockholders. It has paid $1,000,000 in clearing the grounds and in after-exposition expenses, and it has $500,000 still in the treasury and undistributed. This exposition as planned at St Louis will in every respect exceed in magnitude the Chicago Exposition. The Chicago Exposition was up to that time the most wonderful in the history of the world, but the Chicago Exposition had under roof 85 acres of ground, while the St. Louis Exposition has under roof 128 acres of ground, or 50 per cent more than the exposition at the city of Chicago. The grounds at Chicago were 680 acres; the grounds at St. Louis are 1,240 acres.

It thus appears that even should there be a tremendous falling off in receipts this exposition would be abundantly able to pay this money back to the Government. The Chicago Exposition opened, as I have stated, with more than $9,000,000 of indebtedness. This exposition, far greater in magnitude, will open with only $4,600,000 of indebtedness. The Chicago Exposition paid all of its indebtedness and had a large amount to pay in dividends upon the stock. How can it be conceived that this exposition, so much greater than the Chicago Exposition, will fall so much below it in receipts as not to be able to pay $4,600,000 of indebtedness, less than half the indebtedness of the Chicago Exposition and more than 50 per cent a greater exposition? But that is not all.

The Chicago Exposition was held in the year of the panic. This exposition is about to be held in highly prosperous times, and by reason of the high price of cotton in that great region tributary to this great exposition the people to the south of it are more prosperous than they have ever been in their history. Is it to be believed that with increased prosperity everywhere, and a much greater prosperity to the south, that this exposition, 50 per cent greater in magnitude and in some respects a hundred per cent greater, will fall far below the receipts at Chicago? But if these receipts fall off $6,000,000 from the receipts of Chicago, and if the expenses were as high as Chicago, still every dollar of this indebtedness would be paid back to the Government of the United States before Congress convened in next December. As expenses are made greater by greater attendance, it is inconceivable that there could be a falling off of six millions in receipts without a falling off in the expenses of administration.

It takes twice as many gate keepers to let a million people pass through as it does to let half a million pass through, and the expenses necessarily fall off as the crowd falls off. So that it is safe to say that if this exposition had half the attendance of Chicago it would still pay back every cent of this money to the Government of the United States before Congress convenes next winter. It seems to me that this is an answer to the suggestion made upon the floor the other day that perhaps the 60 per cent of the receipts left to this company would not be sufficient to pay the running expenses of the institution. At Chicago the running expenses were less than 25 per cent of the receipts, and more than 75 per cent of the receipts were left for the payment of debts and of dividends.

Now, I want to pass from that question to the question of the permanent improvements in the city of St. Louis. It seems to me that the statements that have been made on that subject are unintentionally unfair. In the first place, it is claimed that great buildings have been erected for the Washington University. Washington University had purchased 110 acres of land, now part of the grounds of this exposition, nearly ten years ago. It had erected upon this land magnificent granite buildings, worth nearly a million of dollars. These grounds were necessary in the exposition grounds, and these buildings could be used in connection with the exposition. The exposition management therefore made a contract by which they leased that property which had cost about a million and a half, exclusive of interest, for $750,000 for three years, upon the stipulation that the whole $750,000 was to be put into the erection upon these grounds of buildings, and the grading of the grounds to make them suitable for exposition purposes, and that these buildings were also to be used by the exposition management.

Thus the exposition management, for a rental of $250,000 a year, rented property worth more than $2,000,000 that was of as much use to this exposition as if the buildings had been constructed by it. This was a highly profitable enterprise for the exposition management.

Now I turn for a moment to the question of the $3,000,000 alleged to have been expended for permanent improvements for the benefit of the city of St. Louis. There is not any $3,000,000; the aggregate of underground improvements is $2,497,000. Let me refer to some of the items which are embraced in this sum of $2,497,000.

Fire protection, 50 miles of pipe, $550,000.
Domestic water supply, 60 miles of pipe, $220,000.

Little or none of that can be of any value in a forest park.

Gas pipe, 25 miles, $30,000.

Substantially none of that can be of any permanent value in a forest park.

Plumbing, $250,000.
Walks and roadways, 75 miles, 20 feet wide, $400,000.

Of what utility can walks arranged with reference to the location of these buildings be as a permanent improvement to the city of St. Louis?

Fences, entrances, ticket booths, $80,000.
Grading, 2,000,000 cubic yards, to adapt this park to the situation of these buildings, $500,000.

These are the "permanent" accessions to the city of St. Louis from the expenditure of the alleged $3,000,000.

But it is also asserted that a million and a quarter of dollars has been put into a permanent art hall. I want to say that this hall is of brick, and it is absolutely indispensable in order to obtain there the art treasures proposed to be exhibited. And it does not approximate in quality or in beauty that splendid Memorial Hall which still embellishes Fairmount Park in the city of Philadelphia.

Nothing whatever has been expended in permanent improvements except what was absolutely indispensable for the purpose of giving this exhibition; and but a trifling part of these improvements can be of any permanent value to the people of the city of St. Louis. So much for this charge that the city of St. Louis has obtained $5,000,000 for local purposes out of this exposition.

I say this loan is a safe one. Then why should we make it? We should make it because the city of St. Louis has only half as much banking capital as the city of Chicago had at the time of the Chicago exposition and only a fourth as much of bank deposits. This city, without the bank assets that the city of Chicago had at the time of its exposition, has succeeded in financing this institution until it is ready to open, within $4,600,000, while the people of Chicago were compelled to open their exposition with $9,200,000 of indebtedness. The people of St. Louis have done wonders. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] for five minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, in the short time allowed me I shall confine my remarks to the proposition so earnestly contended for on this floor that the Government ought to take money out of the Treasury and loan it to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. This proposition is simply to loan $4,600,000 to a corporation, to be repaid within a certain time. Now, if it were conceded, Mr. Chairman—which I do not—that there is constitutional warrant and authority for the Government to do this, yet I would contend in opposing this proposition that it is absolutely unfair and unjust and unwise, from a business standpoint, to vote the money of the people away in this manner, and based on such security as is offered. This proposition, presented as it is with a pledge or security for the repayment of the money, should be treated as a business matter, subject to business rules.

Is it possible that any man or any institution in this country familiar with business matters who has money to loan as a safe and reliable investment would risk his money in such a loan as this? It appears that this exposition has by mismanagement, misgovernment, and bad business principles and unparalleled extravagance rushed on into bankruptcy. Can such an institution as that come fairly and justly under such conditions and appeal to business men to loan money to put it upon its feet? What guaranty have we that this money will be paid back? If we judge the future from the past, it is but a slim one. What, I ask, is the financial condition to-day of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition? Let me call attention to the evidence of the director-general of this institution before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions. Here is what he says on page 34 of the hearings before that committee:

Mr. FRANCIS. Gentlemen, a great amount of this money that we are asking has already been earned and is due upon contracts. There will be over $2,000,000 of this money that we will have to pay on contracts already signed. I had $122,000 in vouchers when I left that I could not pay because we did not have the money. We had about $300,000 left, but we had to reserve that to pay our day laborers on Saturday. Then, there is a great deal of work we will have to do as soon as the spring opens that we can not let out by contract. This four and a half million dollars will enable us to open the exposition, and we can not do it on any less.

Mr. Chairman, here is a great industrial exposition that this Government has helped that comes and admits through its director-general that its expenditures have been, it seems to me, in many respects reckless, and that after the expenditure of $15,000,000, if the Government does not come forward and advance four and a half millions more in addition to the $5,000,000 already advanced by the Government, this exposition will hardly be able to throw open its gates. The argument is that because the Government has advanced heretofore $5,000,000, now the duty devolves on Congress to put up $4,600,000 more to save the enterprise from a failure. Why not apply that argument and reasoning to the stockholders of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition and the municipality of St. Louis, who jointly have subscribed $10,000,000 to the exposition? The stockholders and the city of St. Louis are each to receive one-third of the net profits after all expenses are paid. Why come to Congress as a business matter and ask Congress to put up enough money to protect the interest of the other joint stockholders? That is the direct question and a practical one.

Mr. Chairman, on such a proposition as this we are acting here in the nature of a fiduciary capacity, and there is not a court in any State in this Union that would not hold responsible in damages an agent acting in a fiduciary capacity who would loan money under these conditions, and make him actionable in damages. It would be declared that the agent had loaned the money of his principal in a reckless manner and without due care. Mr. Chairman, there are other matters I should like to refer to. I heard yesterday with profound amazement the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] say that this proposition was constitutional, and being constitutional that this money ought not to be loaned by the Government to any institution save a large and great one that was expending a great deal of money.

I have great respect for the ability of the gentleman from Missouri, but I would be glad, indeed, if he would be so kind as to refer me to any section or paragraph or word in the Constitution that warrants such a use of the public money as is here proposed.

I find that section 8 of the Constitution says:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Again, the Constitution says the Congress shall have power "to borrow money on the credit of the United States."

It can not be that the distinguished gentleman from Missouri believed that this proposed loan was authorized under the "general welfare" clause of the above section, because he said, as I recall his language, that the money should not be loaned by the Government to anything but these large, expensive, and glittering expositions. It is true that the people who get up the county and State fairs and expositions bear the burden of the taxes that contribute the money as a loan to carry on these splendid expositions, but the Constitution discriminated against your county and State fairs and no money can be loaned you by the Government, but it must all go to Louisiana Purchase Exposition and expositions of like nature.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the Government ought ever to occupy the position of a lender of its money to any individual or corporation or to any enterprise, local or national. I believe this to be a fundamental principle of our Constitution. I with hesitancy concede that conditions might arise that would excuse or justify a donation by Congress, when some great calamity has befallen the people or where some great enterprise of general benefit to the people claims such a donation. Congress already has complied with this condition in an appropriation of $5,000,000 to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition; but this proposition is to ask Congress to make a straight-out loan.

I do not, Mr. Chairman, propose to say one word that would be harmful to the success of the St. Louis Exposition, but it behooves us to meet the situation as it is presented to us fairly and boldly, discuss it as we would were we as individuals approached as a business matter for the loan of money. That is the way to test this loan proposition fairly. I have already pointed out to the committee that to-day the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company is behind on its contracts to the enormous amount of $2,000,000, and that this amount will be used out of the loan now sought from the Government to restore the financial credit and standing of the exposition company. That is the condition to-day.

We are earnestly assured if we make this loan, with these discouraging conditions staring us in the face, that every dollar of the money the Government loans will be paid back according to the stipulated agreement and conditions provided in amendment "10," made by the Senate on the urgent deficiency bill of the House. We are to be paid out of the gross receipts of the exposition company.

Governor Francis, the director-general, makes his estimate that there will be 30,000,000 paid admissions at 50 cents each. The concessions, he says, will amount to $6,000,000, making a grand total of $21,000,000. How does he arrive at these estimates? It is an easy matter when a man wants to borrow money to make an estimate of profits, and I say, after reading the evidence given by Governor Francis before the committee, if his judgment and business estimates are as bad in the matter of gate receipts as it has been in the mistaken judgment and estimates that he has made in the past as to the costs of the exposition, that there will be nothing in the way of receipts to reimburse the Government for its loan of $4,600,000.

I call the committee's attention to the spectacular basis upon which the estimate of receipts is made up:

He bases this estimate upon the population of the tributary country. The population of our country during the Chicago Exposition was 69,000,000 in round numbers. In eleven years we think it is safe to calculate upon an increase of 25 per cent in population. Twenty-five per cent of 69,000,000 is a little over 17,000,000—17,250,000. Add that to 69,000,000 and you have 86,250,000. We base this calculation upon a population of 84,000,000. That does not include the increased population caused by our new possessions; it does not count the Filipinos or the Hawaiians or the Porto Ricans.

You are familiar with the immigration statistics and know how the population has been increasing in that way during the past year. A population of 84,000,000, basing the increase on an average increase throughout the country, will give to the States contributory to St. Louis, running no farther east than Indiana and no farther west than Colorado and taking in the Mississippi Valley, a population in that territory of 26,000,000 people.

We think it fair—indeed, we think it very moderate—to estimate that of the 26,000,000 people inhabiting those States 4,000,000 will visit the exposition, and that those 4,000,000 people will go into the exposition an average of five times. That takes in all St. Louis and all East St. Louis and the cities on the east side of the Mississippi River and all of the territory immediately contiguous to St. Louis.

If that is correct, if 4,000,000 people out of 26,000,000 people enter the exposition, and enter its gates an average of five times, that will be 20,000,000 alone. Now, taking the 26,000,000 from the 84,000,000 population, we have 58,000,000 left. That takes in the Atlantic seaboard; that takes in the country west of the Rockies, and takes in the country as far west as Indiana. In that territory are 58,000,000 people. We think a very moderate estimate is that 1,000,000 of those 58,000,000 will attend the fair and, coming a longer distance, they will stay longer than the people who come a shorter distance, and will enter the exposition, we say, seven times. If so, that will add 7,000,000 people to our 20,000,000 people, making 27,000,000 people.

Now, we estimate that there will be 100,000 visitors from foreign countries. That includes the entire Orient and all the European countries and includes Mexico and Canada, which have close and direct rail connection with St. Louis; that includes all of Central and South America. Our information is to the effect that they are making preparations in those countries to visit the exposition in large numbers, and we have the same reports from Europe, namely, that large numbers are coming from there and other parts of the world as well. If 100,000 come that distance, we think it is safe to estimate that they will go on an average of twenty times each. That will make 2,000,000 more in addition, making a total of 29,000,000 people. At 50 cents each that would be $14,500,000.

I ask, in all sincerity, Is not all this chimerical, mere talk? The director-general seems to forget in his lurid and extravagant calculations that the people of the United States have become somewhat wearied and tired of expositions, because when you see one you see generally what all others have.

This ought to be a large factor in his estimate. Would any man of business judgment risk his money on such conjectural estimates? Why, Mr. Chairman, bad weather or the war between Japan and Russia could easily upset and undo the entire estimate, and then, as a matter of course, the company would come back to Congress and ask to be discharged from its contract to repay the Government. That is the usual road all such matters travel.

Mr. Chairman, there is another view that I have of this matter outside of the constitutional objection and the business matter, and that is this: It is well understood that the spirit of economy is predominating in this Congress, so much so that it has already been announced that there would be no river and harbor bill, no public buildings bill, made up during this present Congress.

I would myself infinitely prefer to see this large sum of $4,600,000 appropriated by the Government to the improvement of our rivers and harbors and to building Government buildings for the use of the people as post-office buildings and court-houses than to see it loaned to the St. Louis exposition.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if this sum that is to be loaned by the Government was used in building a good, comfortable post-office building at county seats, say at a cost of $10,000 or $12,000 each, how many people of our country would be made happy by having a good, comfortable post-office building? They would far exceed in numbers the magnificent estimates made by Governor Francis on the paid admissions.

The people all over the country are aroused about the matter of Government aid for the improvement of their public roads. I am an earnest advocate of this aid being given by the Government, safeguarded in the proper way. But the objection comes up already that it is unconstitutional to help the people improve their public roads with money from the common Treasury. Suppose, Mr. Chairman, that this $4,600,000 that we are asked to loan to this exposition—with scarcely a ray of hope of its repayment—should be used in the improvement of the public roads in four of the States of the Union. What a transformation it would make. What a happy, prosperous, and contented people we would find when this amount of money had been spent on their public roads. They would hold up their hands and call their Government blessed.

So it is if this amount were placed on the internal waterways of some of the States it would increase the commercial traffic and prosperity of the people bordering on these waterways a hundred fold. I do not, Mr. Chairman, refer to these matters in a complaining or carping spirit, but the demand is justly coming up from all sections of the country, north, south, east, and west, that some at least of the immense revenues of the country must be used at home and for the commercial benefit of the interests of the masses of our people. These matters it behooves the Congress to heed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I assume that no one will dispute the probable grandeur of the St. Louis Exposition and that there is no American who will not be proud of the success of that exposition. But this is not a question that is to be settled to-day by reference to fountains, pictures, rhetoric, and all that sort of thing. It is a plain, practical, business question, and as representatives of plain, practical, business people we ought to deal with it as such.

What is the question? The St. Louis Exposition Society is a private corporation of the State of Missouri. It is engaged in a great work. It has been recognized as a national work. Congress has given to the aid of that private corporation in this national work $5,000,000, and given it upon the pledge made on this floor that if the $5,000,000 were given the United States would not be called upon to give anything more. I set that aside, however. I set aside the question of the constitutionality of the loan, and I come down to the plain, practical, business question, Can you justify to your constituents the loaning of $4,600,000 to this private corporation out of the Treasury of the United States, in view of the obligations now resting upon that Treasury?

Let us look at it a moment. This money is to come out of the Treasury of the United States. There are certain prior claims upon that Treasury. Can these prior claims be satisfied and this $4,600,000 be safely loaned? That is the question. Let me quote to you from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. This is his statement as to the condition of the Treasury:

In view of different statements made by Members of this Congress in which legislation is suggested upon the ground that we have a large surplus in the Treasury, I think it my duty to call the attention of the House and of the country to a real problem that we are called upon to solve. It is this: How can we reduce the estimated expenses of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year $42,000,000?

The total estimates submitted at the beginning of this session for ordinary expenses, exclusive of $56,500,000 required to meet the sinking fund, amount to $727,474,206.79.

In addition, more than ten millions in the nature of supplemental estimates have come to the Committee on Appropriations by reference of the House. Those that have gone to other committees and still more that will follow that will come to Congress before the session closes will surely increase that sum at least $15,000,000. The arbitrary cut made in the Engineer's estimates for contract work on rivers and harbors, which will probably not be sustained if the contract obligations are met, amounts to $4,843,716. Adding these sums to the original estimates makes a grand total of $747,317,922.79.

The total revenues are estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next at $704,472,090.72. Estimates in excess of the probable total revenues, $42,845,832.07.

Then the chairman further goes on to say:

The present net cash balance in the Treasury amounts to $224,000,000. This sum is likely to be materially diminished in the near future (1) by payment on account of the isthmian canal, $50,000,000; (2) by requisition on account of unexpended balances of appropriations, which are: For increase of the Navy, $27,000,000; for rivers and harbors, $37,000,000; for public buildings, $17,000,000; total, $131,000,000.

Thus if all outstanding obligations fixed by appropriations already made were liquidated the net cash in the Treasury would be reduced to the dangerously low-water mark of $93,000,000, a sum less than it has reached at any period since the era of depression that antedated the beginning of Mr. McKinley's first Administration.

There yet remains to be appropriated to meet contract obligations authorized chiefly by the last Congress on account of public works as follows:

For increase of the Navy	$82,718,659.00
For rivers and harbors	36,628,364.89
For public buildings	17,161,609.34
Total	136,509,233.23

The estimates of appropriations required to be made at this session on account of the foregoing are:

For increase of the Navy	$38,226,860.00
For rivers and harbors (engineers' estimates)	13,540,753.00
For public buildings	9,037,208.00
Total	60,804,821.00

There should be no legislation passed reducing revenues, and this Congress must exercise economy, not refusing any necessary item to meet the growing expenses of this great country, but to strike from the estimates and from the appropriation bills reported to this House every superfluous item. We must keep within the revenues.

That is to say, taking into account the estimates for the running of the Government, for the ordinary conduct of its affairs from day to day, at the end of this fiscal year there will be a deficit in the Treasury of $42,000,000.

Now, we have many things conceded to be necessary that we can not appropriate for because of the condition of the Treasury and the demand for economy.

For instance, you go up here to the War Department to have an interview relating to your official business with an officer of that Department, and you are told that he is to be found down on Pennsylvania avenue somewhere in the second story of a rented building. Why is he not provided with an office? Because we must exercise economy. And that is only one instance, of which there are many. To cite another: There is, in my district, according to the report of the engineer in charge, a public work that, unless immediate appropriation be made for its repair, will collapse and destroy the entire navigation of a river. I can not get an appropriation for it. Why? Because we can not afford a river and harbor bill.

There are demands of many kinds, believed by those making them to be legitimate demands, that no response can be made to because we must exercise economy.

In that we all acquiesce. But how shall we satisfy our constituents when we further acquiesce in withholding appropriations from their legitimate projects and in giving $4,600,000 to St. Louis for its exposition?

Oh, but, it is said, this is a loan. I venture to say that no man familiar with our dealings with expositions in the past believes in his heart that any cent of this money will ever be repaid. The next thing that we will be called upon to do will be to release our claim.

I am opposed to this measure as extravagant and unjustifiable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I can not refrain from expressing my surprise and also my regret at the peculiar character of some of the objections that have been urged against the adoption of this amendment. I do not agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that the only question involved in this proposition is merely one of dollars and cents. The question that presents itself to us is this: Shall we, the representatives of the people, confronted as we are with an honest and straightforward presentation of the unavoidable difficulties that have been encountered in carrying through this great national enterprise—shall we refuse to do our duty by the people and the people's exposition simply to preserve a reputation for questionable and wholly indefensible economy in legislation? Shall we for the first time in our history do violence to that magnificent spirit of national liberality which has always characterized the American people in order to maintain the delusion that parsimony is an attribute of statesmanship?

I believe in economy. I believe in protecting the Treasury of the United States against all unwarranted and unjustifiable expenditures. I have no sympathy, however, and but little patience, with that peculiar brand of inconsistent and contradictory economy which so often manifests itself in this House, and which earnestly and pathetically advocates an appropriation for some purely local and wholly unimportant purpose, and in the same breath denies fair and proper treatment to some great national enterprise in whose success every public-spirited citizen of the United States has an intense personal interest.

Mr. Chairman, the Louisiana Purchase Exposition is not a sectional undertaking. It does not belong, as some seem to think, to the city of St. Louis. Its glories are not confined to the narrow limits of the State of Missouri. Its influence reaches far beyond the boundaries of that splendid domain which to-day stands as an enduring monument to the constructive genius and statesmanship of Thomas Jefferson. It is your exposition; it is my exposition; it is an American exposition; it is a universal exposition; it will be an epitome of American thought, American genius, American advancement, and American civilization.

I believe that President Francis and the gentlemen associated with him, who are charged with responsibility for the successful inauguration and completion of this gigantic enterprise, are engaged in a great and patriotic work. Instead of censure we should give them praise; instead of abuse they should receive encouragement; instead of meeting with objections in this Chamber they should receive our cordial support and enthusiastic cooperation. I know and you know that they are not working for personal glory or aggrandizement. Theirs is altogether a labor of love. They are performing patriotic and laborious service for you and for me and for every American citizen.

Mr. Chairman, the surprising statement has been made in this debate that the citizens of St. Louis have not discharged their full duty toward this exposition; that they have been derelict in the loyalty of their support of this great project. It has been argued that the city itself will enjoy such special and extraordinary advantages by reason of the holding of this exposition within its corporate limits that the people there should be compelled to pay out of their already depleted finances the sum necessary to complete this great undertaking.

Mr. Chairman, I deny the accuracy of that statement and characterize it as an unfair, an unjust, and an ungenerous reflection on the public spirit of the citizens of the metropolis of the Mississippi Valley. St. Louis has done her full duty. She has been weighed in the balance of civic and national pride and not found wanting.

Does any gentleman believe for a moment that the $10,000,000 donated to the fair itself is all that the city of St. Louis has invested in that enterprise? Do you count for naught the disinterested and devoted services of 100 of her most distinguished and progressive citizens? Do you intend to refuse to give her credit for the millions upon millions of dollars invested in additional railroad and street car facilities, in new hotels, restaurants, and apartment buildings whose construction is made necessary in order to feed and house the visitors to the fair? Do you remember Buffalo? Do you recall the experience of Chicago? Do you remember the miles upon miles of stately buildings that remained vacant for years after the Columbian Exposition closed its doors?

Ah, gentlemen, you may speak of the special and extraordinary advantages that accrue to a city in which an international exposition is held, but the fact remains that the dreary record of special and extraordinary advantages of the Columbian fair, so far as the city of Chicago was concerned, will be found in the foreclosure proceedings in the chancery courts of Cook County. I have heard it estimated by conservative business men of Chicago, and I have no doubt the statement will be borne out by the representatives of that wonderful city in this Chamber, that the financial loss occasioned by that fair was not less than $20,000,000 in excess of her voluntary donations. But Chicago's loss was the nation's gain. A new impetus was given to our export trade. Our foreign commerce was expanded, and to-day the people of the United States realize that the investment was a profitable one for them as a whole.

You ask why does not the management borrow these $4,600,000 in the city of St. Louis. I answer by saying that the drain on the financial resources of the city has been exceptionally severe. The per capita cost of this exposition to the people of St. Louis already approximates $30 for every man, woman, and child. I maintain that it is not right, it is not fair, to ask her to assume this additional and tremendous burden at this time. I do not believe that we should insist on taxing the generosity of her citizenship to the point of absolute injustice and imposition. The world can not but admire the pluck and patriotic determination of any city that will cheerfully undertake an international contract of this magnitude.

The distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], for the brilliancy of whose intellect and eloquence of speech I have a more sincere admiration than for that of any other gentleman in this Chamber, in his speech last Monday also directed the attention of the House to an item of $5,000,000 which he says has been invested in permanent improvements to be used for all time to come by the city of St. Louis. I want to emphasize the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] that three-fifths of that amount, or $3,000,000, have been expended in grading the grounds, digging sewers and water courses, filling up depressions, laying pipes and mains, and inaugurating a perfect and complete system of sanitation. While these improvements may be regarded as permanent in their nature, I would like to know of what practical value they will be to St. Louis after the great fair is numbered with the historical events of the past? Forest Park, in which this exposition is located, marks the extreme western limits of the city. It is far removed from the center of population, and the site is hardly available for any permanent public purpose.

If the value of this kind of investment to future generations can be computed in dollars and cents, then I would like to know what were the lasting benefits that accrued to the city of Chicago by reason of her compulsory investment in this same character of permanent improvements in Jackson Park?

There is an item of $1,250,000 for a permanent art building. In justification of that item I want to say that the great artists of the world, as well as the owners of famous and invaluable works of art, declined to exhibit their priceless paintings and rare sculpture unless such exhibition could be made in a building of architectural beauty and absolutely fireproof in every way. The action of the management in complying with this reasonable request is certainly worthy of commendation. The play of Hamlet without the melancholy prince would be even more interesting than a universal exposition in which the progress of art was not a distinctive feature.

The other item of $750,000, which has been paid to Washington University, can not properly be classed as a permanent improvement. Washington University is not a State university. It is an endowed educational institution, and one of the best in the western country. The money paid to the university is in the nature of rental for three years' use of the commodious granite buildings for the offices of the World's Fair management. And I maintain that if the management had been compelled to construct its own administration buildings, supply the heating and lighting apparatus, pay the insurance and repairs, etc., it would have cost far in excess of $750,000.

So that after all the single item of $1,250,000 remains as an available permanent improvement to remind the citizens of St. Louis and of the country of the glories of an exposition, in the building of which there were spent approximately $40,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, we are fond of boasting of the wonderful development of our national resources and the large increase in our material wealth. I have been riveted to my seat for hours by the inspiring eloquence of the gentleman from Iowa when speaking of our wonderful industrial and commercial progress. We claim to-day, and justly so, not only commercial supremacy, but also preeminence among the nations of the earth in the field of art, literature, invention, and scientific research. But when we are called upon to present to the world and to civilization the practical evidence of our remarkable achievements, there are those among us who object, and when we analyze their objections we find that they may be summed up in the question, Does it pay? Looking at it from this standpoint, from the commercial standpoint, I say: Yes, it will pay the nation as a whole. It will prove a profitable investment for the United States. It will bring financial returns to the country at large a hundred fold.

The great Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in which the civilized nations participated, gave to them the first practical demonstration of the superiority of the product of the American mine, the American farm, and the American workshop. It was there that the Englishman first learned of the superior construction and durability of our locomotives. It was there that the Korean first conceived the idea of inaugurating an American electric railway system in his own far-away country. It was there that the Frenchman learned to use our silks and drink our wines. It was there that the people of every country under the sun first became impressed with the importance and the necessity of entering into closer trade relations with the United States. Let us continue this glorious system of education which has proved of such incalculable advantage to us in the past. Ten years have passed since the Chicago fair. Let us show the world what a decade of real, live American progress means.

You are not asked to vote an additional appropriation for this exposition. You are simply asked for a loan of $4,600,000 to complete this enterprise under restrictions which amply secure the Government against the possibility of a loss. I believe as firmly as I believe anything that every dollar of that loan will be repaid into the Treasury of the United States.

Gentlemen, the eyes of the world are upon us to-day. We have invited all nations to participate in this universal exposition. Our invitation has been accepted. It was extended not at the instance of the exposition management, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] seems to think, but at the instance of the enlightened public sentiment of the American people, at the instance of that commendable spirit of comity, of courtesy, and good will that prevails among all friendly powers. By our own act, on the 1st day of next May we will become the proud host of the civilized world. As for me, I am in favor of extending a royal welcome to our guests and preparing for them a feast that will be commensurate with the dignity, the greatness, the wealth, and the grandeur of the American Republic. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE] is recognized.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Government has gone to the very limit in appropriating money for exposition purposes. I am opposed to any further appropriations for the St. Louis Exposition, and I am equally opposed to any so-called loan. If we are to aid that exposition still further, I think we should do so by a gift and not deceive ourselves or anyone else by calling it a loan. It is a grave question whether we, the guardians of the people's money, have any right to make an appropriation of this character for a purpose which is not a governmental purpose. But I realize that the Government is committed to the policy. Other expositions are on the way, and Congress will undoubtedly continue to make appropriations for them until the end of time.

There is, however, every reason why such appropriations should be most carefully considered and made with due regard for economy. When the initial appropriation of $5,000,000 for the St. Louis Exposition was made it was a most generous one; it was all that could be asked or expected. We clearly understood that no more would be asked for. I think there can be no doubt that the managers of the exposition so understood it themselves. Consequently they come now before Congress asking, not for an appropriation, but for a loan. It would have been more businesslike and shown more convincing evidence of good faith if the managers had made some effort to secure this money in the usual way from banking institutions. The evidence given before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions shows that no such attempt was ever made.

That fact at least raises a suspicion that the security is not good or that there is no expectation of the debt ever being paid. Personally I can not believe that there is any chance of its payment. I admire the optimism of some of the friends of this exposition. I firmly believe that it will, in a general way, be a great success. I certainly hope so; but, Mr. Chairman, expositions are not a financial success, and it will be a perfect marvel if this one proves to be such. There will certainly be some hard-luck story which the managers can tell as a reason why they were unable to pay this debt, why the exposition was not a financial success, and why it is necessary for Congress to make a still further appropriation to make up a deficit.

We are told that our surplus is likely to become a deficit, and that it is necessary to practice economy in governmental expenditures. The Panama Canal, it is estimated, will cost $200,000,000. As a matter of fact, it is likely to cost very much more. The expense of maintaining and constructing our Navy is an enormous one, and it is now said by those in a position to know that we need not expect hereafter any naval appropriation bill which will carry an appropriation of less than $100,000,000. A service-pension bill is on the way, which, if passed by Congress, will add about $50,000,000 more to our annual expenditures.

Surely some one should call a halt, and economy is, in fact, being observed in certain directions. There is to be no general river and harbor bill at this session of Congress, in spite of the fact that in various sections of our country there is a most urgent demand for appropriations in behalf of needed improvements in aid of our growing commerce. There is to be no public-building bill, in spite of the fact that in various parts of the country buildings are absolutely needed for the proper transaction of the public business. The Members of this House have unanimously, with a heroism rarely equaled and never surpassed, declined to accept the mileage to which they were legally entitled. Let the good work go on. If the rule of economy is to be applied—and I believe it should—it should certainly be applied to the proposition now before the House. Let us save this $4,600,000 for purposes which are demanded in the interests of the people. I hope the Members of the House will emphatically refuse to make this appropriation. To my mind it is an extravagant, unwarranted, and unjustifiable use of the people's money. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries.

SENATE AMENDMENT TO URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I favor concurrence in the Senate amendment with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that no one seriously contends that the Constitution prohibits our passing this provision. My fervid and eloquent friend from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] says that if the Constitution does not prohibit it, it ought to do so. Recognizing, as he must at that time have noted, the absence of my lovable and learned friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], the custodian of the Constitution, and he, the gentleman from Nebraska, acting as custodian of the Treasury, I was surprised that he did not at the time ask unanimous consent that the Constitution be amended.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SHERMAN. My time is brief, and I do not wish to be interrupted.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has referred to me, and I think it is but fair that he should let me interrupt him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, very well; I will yield to the lovable gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has misunderstood everything I said if he believes that I took the position that Congress was prohibited by the Constitution from making this appropriation. I never said so, and if the gentleman had given attention to my speech he would know that I declined to say so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am very glad to know that the gentleman thinks that we have the right to make the appropriation, although he does not think it proper. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] insists that the amendment here is in violation of the rules of the Senate. I am surprised that that statement should be made on the floor at this time. That statement can frequently be made about appropriations that come into this House from the Senate, but in this instance the point of order was raised against the amendment in the Senate, and the presiding officer held that the amendment was in order.

I think the proposition before us is, Is there any obligation on the part of the Government to make this appropriation? Is it reasonable that we should make it? Is there reasonable probability that the loan will be returned?

As to the obligation of the Government, it seems to me that after we had passed the first bill, which committed this Government to the expenditure of $5,000,000—a proposition which had the support of the gentleman from Iowa, but had my opposition in its inception—after we had passed that, then I believe we were obligated, in all reason and all fairness, to do all things that we could to see this exposition through to a finish. I ought not to be surprised at the position of the gentleman from Iowa in having advocated embarking on this proposition and then abandoning it, because I noticed the other day in the public press that he made the assertion that he never yet had embarked in any business enterprise whatever which yielded one cent of profit, saving the purchase of a cow for $50, which his wife sold for $70. [Laughter.]

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Government is under a moral obligation to loan its credit to the St. Louis Exposition because of the original declaration of Congress. I believe that the obligation of the St. Louis exposition is all we need and require to insure the return of this money. I speak of the obligation separate from the lien which is proposed upon the gate receipts. The obligation, sir, is the obligation of a great corporation with great assets, and even were the lien not created, I believe the obligation would be sufficient to insure the return to the Treasury of the money now advanced. The experience of all expositions held in this country—all great expositions and some small ones—warrants the belief that the amount of receipts at St. Louis will be vastly in excess of the amount required to repay every cent that the Government now is asked to advance in aid of this exposition.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] suggests, Mr. Chairman, that the exposition will be seen by only one of every sixteen of the citizens of this country, and therefore he concludes that it will be of benefit to only one-sixteenth of the population of the Government. That is a very narrow view to take. The exposition will be of benefit not merely to the few who go to St. Louis, not merely to the citizens there, but to every citizen in this country. Expositions always are. Let me read to you the words McKinley uttered at Buffalo while the death messenger was waiting outside his door:

> Expositions are the timekeepers of progress; they record the world's advancement; they stimulate the energy, enterprise, and intellect of the people and quicken human genius; they go into the home; they broaden and brighten the daily life of the people; they open mighty storehouses of information to the student. Every exposition, great or small, has helped to some onward step. Comparison of ideas is always educational, and as such instructs the brain and hand of man.

Mr. Chairman, believing as I do that this Government is morally obligated to see this exposition through to a finish; believing as I do that every cent advanced by this provision will be returned to the Treasury of the United States; believing as I do that this grand exposition will be of lasting benefit, not only to the St. Louis people and to the people of Missouri alone, but to all the citizens in this country, I earnestly advocate the concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

Now, the balance of my time I desire to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING].

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have already yielded my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of concurring in the Senate amendment because I believe that, as amended by the House, every dollar of the loan which it carries will be returned to the United States Treasury before the close of the exposition.

I am in favor of this amendment because I believe that the people of this country will be paid many times more than the mere amount of the loan and many times more than the entire cost of the exposition in the benefits that will come to them.

Great expositions mark great epochs in our history. They mark the great onward progress in civilization, science, mechanics, art, architecture, and the welfare of the people. Take, for instance, the exposition of 1876, in Philadelphia. There were many features of that exposition, either one of which was an ample warrant for its being held, and either one of which has conferred benefits upon the people worth many times the whole cost of the exposition.

I will cite but one or two features—domestic architecture. A great step forward in domestic architecture of the country dates from this time. The English Government built on the grounds of the exposition a model domestic home, which was the inspiration of all architects who have since contrived and designed attractive, beautiful, comfortable, and inexpensive houses. It was a model of harmony in its lines and proportions, and it has been many thousand times reproduced in principle if not exactly on the same plans.

Since that time homes tastefully decorated and well furnished have been possible for people of small means.

Another great feature in the exposition of 1876 was a revelation in sanitation. The knowledge diffused throughout the country at that time was, and has ever since been, of incalculable value to the people of our country. In this one department alone the people were benefited to an extent many times more than the entire cost of the exposition.

I could refer to many other features which are hardly of less value than those I have named. I believe that every exposition that has been held in our country, whether it has been financially successful or not, has benefited the whole people far beyond any extent that is measured by the cost.

So far from their being extravagancies or luxuries with only a local value, I believe that they are economic necessities, and to do them justice we should deal with them not with a niggardly but a bountiful hand.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that I might find myself in a position to vote for this measure. My hope was fallacious. I have listened very attentively to the arguments made here to-day. I was very forcibly struck by the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], who closed his remarks a few moments ago, when he said that the Constitution of the United States did not prohibit this loan. The burden of showing the propriety of this loan is upon the other side of this question, and it is the first time that I have ever heard a lawyer argue that that which is not prohibited in the Constitution is granted to the Congress as a power. I do not care whether Congress has the power or not. There is no grant in the Constitution, no word of the Constitution that justifies the position of the gentleman from New York.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] points out a great number of loans and gifts that the Government has given to the people. We gave, for instance, to the suffering people of South Carolina, and we have given to a great many charitable objects. There is no provision of the Constitution justifying that. I admit all of that. But here comes a very different sort of question, a question to which I am going to refer in but one direction. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] says that this is a grand money-making scheme, and he demonstrates by those figures which he read to the House that there is an abundance of money. If it is so easy to figure out an enormous profit, I suggest that it would be well enough to let some of those gentlemen interested in the work and who pledged themselves that they would not come here and ask for any more money take hold of that very profitable and very promising scheme and loan the money. Then comes the gentleman from Illinois, and he says that they are poor—the representative of the local interests out there at East St. Louis—and he describes them as in a condition of practical bankruptcy.

Now, which are we to believe? Are we to loan this money to these people because they are rich and independent, or are we to loan it to them because they are poor and bankrupt? Let me point out a suggestion in regard to this security. The Government of the United States is entitled under the former gift to one-third of the net profits, to be paid back to the United States. Now, these gentlemen come very kindly forward and say this: "It is very true that we pledged you one-third of the profits and we promised that the five millions should be the last dollar we would ever ask for; still we want you to give us four and a half millions more, and if we make any money we will pay one-third of it to you out of your own money." That is the proposition exactly, and no man can state it differently. They propose to take the money that they have promised to pay on the five million dollar loan and pay it back to us on the four and a half million dollar loan.

Suppose that they undertake to carry this out. Let us see where we may land. The United States is already entitled to the net one-third profits. The corporation out there, or each of its stockholders, holds an indefeasible right to every dollar that is earned by that corporation. These gentlemen come here unauthorized, so far as I can see, and, without any act of the corporation, pledge the entire gate receipts to the extent of four million and a half dollars, ousting all those men who have put up their money from any participation in the proceeds of the gate receipts. Suppose there is a default made and the Secretary of the Treasury, making an unheard-of proposition, goes out there and undertakes to sequestrate the gate receipts, undertakes by some process to seize the gate receipts. How long do you think it would be until the whole concern would be placed in the hands of a receiver under the control of the United States court to settle the rights of all the people who have put their money into that concern? What right has this corporation or its agent to come here and pledge the receipts that belong to the men who have contributed their money? The whole thing is unfortunate, and I shall not vote for it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FIELD. Mr. Chairman, I admit that great advantages will result to the State of Texas, which I in part have the honor to represent, from the St. Louis Exposition. I know and appreciate the intimate and extensive commercial relations of my State with this great and enterprising city, and while, from a business standpoint, I would be justifiable in rejecting this proposition to loan to a private corporation $4,600,000 on the precarious security offered, yet so strong is my inclination to aid in this great enterprise that notwithstanding this objection I might support the amendment if I were not sincerely convinced that Congress has no right, under the Constitution, to make any such loan of money. I belong to the old school of Democracy and believe in a strict construction of the Constitution, and while some Democrats now assert that for ten years past we have recognized the constitutional right of Congress to make donations of this kind, however strong my inclination might be I have never been able to find any warrant in the Constitution for Congress to loan the money of the people to any individual or corporation for any purpose whatsoever.

During this discussion I was humiliated, as a Democrat, when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], a leader of his party and a Republican of Republicans, from the vantage ground he occupied, pointed out to Members on this side of the Chamber the well-known position of the Democratic party on such questions and tauntingly charged them with inconsistency.

Mr. Chairman, but a few years ago the question of the right of the Government to loan money to the people on security was discussed in every schoolhouse in the South and the West. At that time the price of farm products was so depressed as to no longer return to the potent farmer the cost of production, and in their dire distress a large number of this most worthy class of our citizens turned to the Government for relief, asking that the Government, from its overflowing Treasury, make them temporary loans on their farm products, a character of security much better than that now offered.

The Democratic party, true to its principles, opposed this policy, and on account of the apparent reasonableness of the demand were unable to satisfactorily answer its opponents until it intrenched itself behind the Constitution and insisted—and rightly, too—that Congress had no right under the Constitution to loan the money in the Treasury, and in this impregnable position Democrats were able to overcome all opposition.

The same principle is involved in the amendment offered; and it seems to me if we support it, we stultify ourselves and contradict our past Democratic record, for I repeat that we have no constitutional right to take from the Treasury the money of the people and loan it to an individual or corporation on any kind of security. It would be a departure from the strict construction of the Constitution, as given to it by our fathers, and break down the defense behind which our party has stood during its lifelong struggle for economy in the administration of the Government. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is now recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the growth of "the show business" or "the show industry," to borrow a common phrase, in the United States has been marvelous. In 1876 we celebrated the greatest event in our history, the birth of the nation, by an exposition at Philadelphia. Then no one interested in it thought of coming to Congress and asking for an appropriation of $5,000,000 or for a million and a half; but they begged Congress to loan them a million and a half of dollars, to be paid out of the profits of the undertaking; and that money was paid, I believe, at the end of litigation in which one of the Members of the House figured at that time.

Next came the exposition at Chicago—that wonderful exposition—the largest and grandest ever undertaken in the world up to that time. Chicago received an appropriation from the General Government; and then the people interested in that exposition went to work to complete the enterprise. On the threshold of the opening they found themselves, as St. Louis finds herself to-day, lacking $5,000,000—yes, lacking $9,000,000, as it appeared then, in order to open the gates. What did they do? They did just what every business corporation should do. They borrowed the money themselves. They went to private individuals; they went to bankers; they pledged their gate receipts. But they borrowed $5,000,000 and went on with their exposition. And this five million was afterwards repaid.

The next exposition of importance was that at Buffalo. And I want to speak of Buffalo, because if I do not somebody else will. I see that my friend from Indiana is now taking notes. They started in for the Pan-American Exposition; they raised their money; they built their buildings; they prepared to open. They borrowed in the first place, I think, $2,000,000, pledging their gate receipts for that amount. They did not come to the Congress of the United States. They went to individuals and to bankers in a little city half the size of St. Louis and borrowed their $2,000,000 on their gate receipts. They then came down here to Washington to ask Congress to loan them $500,000, and they went home again, hardly daring to bring the proposition before the Congress of the United States, because they were met with such a cold shoulder. And then they put up $500,000 more and mortgaged their gate receipts again for the second $500,000. They went to work and carried out their exposition.

Of course, we remember the pall that fell over the exposition. McKinley was assassinated there, and the gate receipts did not increase as they had everywhere else, and the exposition association was left with a large debt upon them. They owed $500,000 to small contractors and mechanics, and they came here and asked Congress to appropriate that $500,000. That was not all their indebtedness. The men who put the second $500,000 on the gate receipts never got a dollar. The men who put up the first $2,000,000 got $1,900,000. There were other and large contractors over and above the $500,000 that never got a dollar. No man who subscribed for the stock ever got a dollar in return. They stood their loss. We gave them the $500,000 appropriation, and I voted for that appropriation. I can not say that I did it cheerfully, because it was the most reluctant vote that I ever gave in my life; but I did it to pay up the debts that they owed to laborers and to small contractors.

Well, now comes along the St. Louis Exposition. Gentlemen come here and say that we are responsible for that show. Why? The gentleman from Minnesota attempted to show that the nation had forced it upon St. Louis; that eighteen governors met there, and it was their sentiment that the show should be held and that St. Louis should be the spot. If I remember correctly, the governor of Missouri invited the eighteen governors to come there, and the governor of Missouri was asked to invite them by the prominent citizens of the city of St. Louis for the purpose of booming the show at the very outset. Forced upon St. Louis! Why, they wanted it.

Mr. THAYER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. No, I can not yield; I have not time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PAYNE. They wanted to get the exposition. Now, are they going to get anything back for the money they have expended? The gentleman from Iowa on my right [Mr. HEPBURN] figured out $5,000,000 in permanent improvements. The other gentleman from Iowa on my left [Mr. SMITH] thought there was not over $1,000,000 in permanent improvements that they were getting back. How, then, will they get their money back? Why, I was talking with a Representative from the city of Buffalo only yesterday and he said although these Buffalo men lost every dollar that they put into the exposition they got the money back, some of them from the increased rents during the year of the exposition, some in one way and some in another, and the city of Buffalo had over twenty new factories established within the next year, attracted there because the people were present at the exposition at Buffalo.

Oh, it is not altogether a losing operation. It is said we are bound to vote this money because we recognized the enterprise and because we passed the act by which the exposition was inaugurated. Well, we did pass it, and we put these words into it:

That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to create any liability of the United States, direct or indirect, for any debt or obligation incurred, nor for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support or liquidation of any debt or obligation created by said Commission.

They say we are bound to help them because we passed that act, when it was nominated in the very bond itself that we should not be called upon for a dollar in the way of liability for expenses.

Mr. HEPBURN. Read the thirteenth section. It is a great deal stronger.

Mr. PAYNE. The thirteenth section says:

That the United States shall not in any manner nor under any circumstances be liable for any of the acts, doings, proceedings, or representations of the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, its officers, agents, or employees, or any of them, or for the service, salaries, labor, or wages of said officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them.

Mr. BARTLETT. Read the twenty-fourth section.

Mr. PAYNE. I can not read the whole act. These limitations are all through the act. Yet we are asked to appropriate this money because, they say, we are responsible in some way.

Mr. Francis says that we are not responsible for the increased expenses unless it be that when they sent their agents abroad the ambassadors and the consular agents did what they could for them.

So we are not responsible for this money. Why did they not get it from private sources?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Because they say they can not get it.

Mr. PAYNE. Not that they can not get it, for they have not tried to get it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. They say they can not borrow it unless they give security.

Mr. PAYNE. They have never made any effort to borrow it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There is nothing to show that they have.

Mr. PAYNE. No; they have conferred among themselves about it, and they have concluded that if we do not give them the money they will raise it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. And will have to give security.

Mr. PAYNE. They will have to raise it. They may have to give personal security.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. They say they will.

Mr. PAYNE. But the gates will open all the same, though Congress does not loan them a dollar. It shows that they know they can get the money in the city of St Louis, that the money is there. Well, if there is any hesitancy about loaning the money it is because the bankers of St. Louis have not yet gone into the pawnbroker business of taking pledges of gate receipts for four million and a half of money.

But they can get it. The show will go on if we do not appropriate this money. Why do they ask for the money? Governor Francis says: "We are asking for a loan for which we propose to offer undoubted security"—that if we do accept this proposition the Government will incur no risk whatever. "We ask only for a loan, and we think we are offering a security here that is not only ample, but on which any of us would lend if we had the money to lend."

Why, if the security is undoubted, and considered so in St. Louis, they know where they can get the money on undoubted security. Why do they not do as Chicago did? Why do they not do as Buffalo did, pledging her gate receipts to go on with her exposition? Why do they come here? Oh, Mr. Francis says they think it is for the interest of the people of the United States and of the Government to put this money into circulation. It is deposited now in the national banks, and deposited on the security of bonds of the United States, and he thinks it is for the interest of the people to put that money into circulation. Why, does he not know that money is deposited in the banks for the very purpose of putting it into circulation among the people by the banks loaning it out? It goes out among the people, and it is circulating now and has been circulating ever since it was put in the banks. He fails to show any good reason why the Government of the United States should loan that money to him. Why should we give up our good security, the gilt-edge bonds of the United States, for even the "good security" he has—the gate receipts of this exposition?

Mr. Chairman, I confess I can not understand the figures presented by this commission. Why, they do not say that this $4,500,000 will find the gates open free of debt. They fail to show anywhere that when the gates are open the institution will be out of debt, and every man knows that it can not be out of debt.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. It is $3,000,000 in debt now.

Mr. PAYNE. The Chicago Exposition cost $22,000,000 up to the time of the opening of the gates. This will cost $2,000,000 more than Chicago for labor. They boast here that their roofs cover 50 per cent more acreage than they had in Chicago. They boast that they have doubled the number of acres, including the parks, that they had in Chicago. They have built roads, they have built bridges and walks, and they have built reservoirs, and they have covered up $5,000,000 in these grounds.

In every way it should cost more than it did at Chicago. Twenty-two millions and $2,000,000 for labor, $24,000,000; 50 per cent more of roofing over buildings—$30,000,000 to open this exposition. They are very careful not to get down to the facts and figures and show just what they have expended and what they have got to do in the future. When they get this open and the show running, then there are other expenses they are looking into to see how they can provide for them. A million dollars for the entertainment of foreign jurors. They are considering the question now as to whether they can pay these jurors or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who have argued this question are all begging the question, commencing with my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania.

The gentleman from Nebraska said that the free rural delivery carriers could not have their salaries increased and a pension bill could not pass; another gentleman says that public-building bills can not pass, and the gentleman from New York gets up and states that Chicago mortgaged her gate receipts for $5,000,000. Every cent of it was paid and $9,000,000 was paid, and $1,068,000 was paid to the stockholders afterwards, and there is $500,000 in the treasury.

Then gentlemen—the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DALZELL, the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. BURKETT, the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. HINSHAW, and others—who stand here and argue if this appropriation passes there can be no public-building bill, there can be no increased salaries for rural free-delivery carriers, there can be no other appropriation are begging the question. They are not meeting it fairly. The only question is, Will this money be paid back and ought the Government under the circumstances loan it to this world's fair exposition? Now, where are we? The Government is a one-third stockholder in this transaction. We are the owners of one-third of the stock, the city of St. Louis is the owner of one-third of the stock, and the citizens of the city of St. Louis are the owners of the other one-third of the stock.

In other words, there is $15,000,000 invested—$5,000,000 by the Government, $5,000,000 by the city of St. Louis, and $5,000,000 by the citizens of the city of St. Louis. They thought this money was sufficient to build the buildings necessary and open the gates of this world's fair; but what happened? Why, Germany came along and demanded more space than anyone ever dreamed they would demand, as well as Italy and France. Germany, Belgium, and Japan recently threatened to withdraw their exhibits unless they were given more space. What could the men in charge of this exposition do—either give them more space and give to the country the greatest exposition the world has ever known or say they would not do it.

Now, the gentlemen opposing this loan are quarreling with the city of St. Louis. I am sorry they can not broaden out and see that this is a great national exposition. That magnificent city is the metropolis of the Mississippi Valley, with Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, and the Southern States surrounding her. They are wasting their time quarreling at this great city. They can not get beyond the bark and get to the heart of this proposition and realize that fifty-three foreign countries are to be represented at the world's fair; that the eyes of the whole world are upon the United States, and a failure of the exposition means a failure of this country, and the success of the exposition means the success of the United States; and every schoolboy who visits the fair, if it is a success, will be proud of the fact that he lives in the United States and that we gave to the world such an exposition. [Applause.]

Let us get away from this little quarrel about St. Louis. Let us get away from this little quarrel whether some one man or other out at St. Louis is going to make a dollar. Let us look at it as we ought to look at it—from the standpoint of a great country never satisfied with giving the world as good an exposition as any country ever did. The people of the United States are not satisfied with that kind of an exposition. We are only satisfied when we can give them the greatest exposition that has ever been known to the history of the world. Now, what has happened? Demands for space have come, demands that this thing be broadened out along every line——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HEMENWAY. I can not be interrupted, because I have only a few minutes. Forty-two States are exhibiting there, ten more than ever exhibited before at any exposition. Fifty-three foreign countries are to have exhibits at St. Louis. Are the fifty-three foreign countries invited to the United States? Are they there to please St. Louis or did they come here to exhibit in an international exposition at the invitation of the Government of the United States? They are not looking to St. Louis to make this exposition a success, but these fifty-three foreign nations are looking to the United States to make it a success; and I want to say to you that in Congress this very day we ought to give these people the power to make it the greatest success ever known in the world in the way of an exposition, and it does not cost us a dollar to do it. Why, there is absolutely no doubt on earth but what every single cent of this money will be paid back. Why? The provision in this bill is that 40 per cent of the gross receipts of the exposition shall be paid upon this debt, and if on July 15 the payments do not amount to $500,000 then they are to take enough money out of the money they have received to pay the $500,000.

Then on the 1st day of August they are to pay $500,000 more, on the 15th of August $500,000 more, and continuing to pay $500,000 every fifteen days until the debt is paid. Some one says: "What if they do not pay?" Then if they do not pay it becomes the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to take charge of the exposition, take charge of its gates, and take charge of its receipts; take every dollar that is necessary to pay this loan. In view of the fact that at Chicago over $14,000,000 of money was taken in from May 1 to November 1, in view of the fact that the expenses of conducting that exposition from May 1 to November 1 was only three and a half million dollars, it stands to reason that the United States will get back every dollar of this money.

Then when you say that you can not have a public-building bill, you can not have that or you can not have this if you vote this money out of the Treasury, you are begging the question, because you know that every dollar of this money will come back into the Treasury. The passing of this item will not stop for one second any appropriation that ought to be passed by this House. I have heard gentlemen say, "Why, HEMENWAY, do you stand for this when you have been all the time advocating economy?" Yes; I have advocated economy, but I will not go so far upon that line that I forget my country. [Applause.] I will not go so far that I will forget the foreign countries that are here, who have been invited here and depend upon us to make the exposition a success. We invited them here and we are going to take care of them, and I sincerely hope that Congress will grant this loan of $4,600,000.

Yes; gentlemen say it is a little matter, but when it was coming to some of the great Eastern States some of the gentlemen so vigorous to-day were not quite so vigorous then.

Mr. PAYNE. Where were you at that time?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I was against the $500,000 for Buffalo, and I will vote against giving this exposition one dollar of money, but I will not vote against loaning the money in view of the fact that it is absolutely certain that it will come back again to the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed for closing debate has arrived. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend concurrence in Senate amendment No. 10 as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were 137 ayes and 87 noes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. BARTLETT as tellers.

The question was again taken; and the tellers reported 161 ayes and 95 noes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that Senate amendment No. 47 be concurred in; that Senate amendment No. 10 be concurred in as amended, and that all other amendments be nonconcurred in.

Mr. HEPBURN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does this motion include a separate vote on amendment No. 10?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that is a matter for the House.

The motion of Mr. HEMENWAY was then agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10954, with Senate amendments thereto, and had directed him to report that the committee recommended concurrence in Senate amendment No. 47, concurrence with an amendment in Senate amendment No. 10, and nonconcurrence in all the other amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. HEPBURN. I demand a separate vote on amendment No. 10.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARLETT. I rise for the purpose of demanding a separate vote on Senate amendment No. 10 as amended.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the recommendation of the committee to concur in Senate amendment No. 47.

The question was taken, and Senate amendment No. 47 was concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on nonconcurrence in all other amendments except amendment No. 10.

The question was taken, and all other amendments except Senate amendment No. 10 were nonconcurred in.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on concurring in Senate amendment No. 10 as amended.

Mr. BARTLETT. Upon that question, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 106, answered "present" 8, not voting 96, as follows:

YEAS—172.

Senate concurrent resolution 40.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of the report and appendices of the Isthmian Canal Commission, with illustrations, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the House of Representatives, and 500 for the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 43.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., and of the inner harbor of Brunswick, Ga., and to furnish therefrom estimates showing the cost of obtaining a channel of ample width to accommodate the commerce of said port, and extending from the wharves in said inner harbor, through said outer bar to the ocean, and of the following depths at mean high tide, to wit, 27 feet, 28 feet, 29 feet, and 30 feet; that is to say, the Secretary of War is directed to furnish a separate estimate of the cost of obtaining a channel at each of said depths; and the Secretary of War is hereby further directed to report whether or not in his opinion it is advisable, if these increased depths or any one or more of them shall be obtained, that the present channel across said outer bar should be straightened.

CROW INDIANS OF MONTANA.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of the special order the bill (H. R. 11676) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Crow Indians of Montana be made the special order, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or bills on the Private Calendar or with any business that is privileged under the rules, and that the bill be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER having restated the request of Mr. DIXON, there was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

GOVERNMENT OF TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill No. 7274.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7274) to amend section 76 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill be read in full.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 76 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 76. That there shall be a superintendent of public instruction, who shall have the powers and perform the duties conferred upon and required of the minister of public instruction by the laws of Hawaii as amended by the act, and subject to modification by the legislature.

"It shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Labor to collect, assort, arrange, and present in reports in 1905, and every five years thereafter, statistical details relating to all departments of labor in the Territory of Hawaii, especially in relation to the commercial, industrial, social, educational, and sanitary condition of the laboring classes, and to all such other subjects as Congress may by law direct. The said Commissioner is especially charged to ascertain the highest, lowest, and average number of employees engaged in the various industries in the Territory, to be classified as to nativity, sex, hours of labor, and conditions of employment, and to report the same to Congress."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF SPEECHES ON ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Members of the House who have addressed the Committee of the Whole on the subject of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition be allowed the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD.

There being no objection, leave was granted accordingly.

ADMINISTRATION OF LAND LAWS.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11812) relating to applications, declaratory statements, entries, and final proofs under the homestead and other land laws, and to confirm the same in certain cases when made outside of the land district within which the land is situated.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever it shall appear to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that an error has heretofore been made by the officers of any local land office in receiving any application, declaratory statement, entry, or final proof under the homestead or other land laws, and that there was no fraud practiced by the entryman, and that there are no prior adverse claimants to the land described in the entry, and that no other reason why the title should not vest in the entryman exists, except that said application, declaratory statement, entry, or proof was not made within the land district in which the lands applied for are situated, as provided by the act of March 11, 1902, such entry or proof shall be confirmed.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage and approval.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have an explanation of the bill, reserving the right to object.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply provides for legalizing entries and proofs under our land law, where the same were made erroneously outside of the land district in which the land lies.

Prior to 1902 there was a law providing that an entryman desiring to make entry or desiring to make proof might go to the nearest county seat, even though it were outside of the land district in which the land lies. In 1902 a law was passed which required proofs to be made within the land district. Partially through the negligence of the Land Department at Washington, the registers and receivers were not notified in a manner or their attention was not called to this change of the law in a manner sufficiently strong to make them change their rules and regulations. As a result, a large number of entries and proofs were permitted by the local land offices to be made under the old law. This bill simply legalizes that particular feature of the entries and proofs, and it is approved by the Department.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman if he has any word from the Secretary of the Interior upon this subject?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes; the matter has been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office and is approved heartily by both of them.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the bill reported favorably by the committee?

Mr. MARSHALL. Unanimously reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARSHALL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FIFTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9658) to amend the first section of an act providing that the circuit court of appeals for the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, approved January 30, 1903.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act providing that the circuit court of appeals for the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, approved January 30, 1903, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the concluding words of said section, to wit, "on the first Monday in September in each year," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "on the third Monday in October in each year."

The amendment recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1490) to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation.

The SPEAKER. That is a continuing order. It can be called up at any time.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I call it up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that there are one or two other matters that the Chair would be glad to lay before the House.

Mr. STEENERSON. All right.

CERTAIN LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1558) to grant to the State of Minnesota certain vacant lands in said State for forestry purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill and to consider the same in the House at the present time. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter (80 acres, more or less) of section 6, township 134 north, range 29 west, fifth principal meridian, being vacant public land adapted for forestry purposes and adjoining a forest reserve belonging to the State of Minnesota, be, and the same is hereby, granted to said State of Minnesota for forestry purposes; but this act shall not prejudice any right to any of said land that may have been acquired by any other party previous to its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

Mr. TAWNEY. I suggest to the gentleman that he withhold his objection pending a statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will reserve the objection while the gentleman makes his statement; but this bill establishes a precedent——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will make this explanation: John S. Pillsbury, late governor of the State of Minnesota, donated to the State something over a thousand acres of land. It was cut-over timber land that is almost entirely worthless. The State has been engaged for some time in the work of reforesting that particular tract of land. It may be called a park or a forest reserve, as you please. This particular tract of about 80 acres which it is sought to obtain for the State comes right up against the land belonging to the State and joins it on three sides. The land has practically no value except for the purpose for which we desire to use it—that is, to use it in connection with the other as a forest reserve.

The State is now about to enter upon it, if it can secure it upon the plan proposed, and cultivate timber on this particular tract. It seems to me, in view of the fact that we are giving land for park purposes and for other similar purposes, that this is a proper grant, and it certainly would be doing nobody any harm. This piece of land is away out from any city; it is not suitable for agricultural purposes; it is cut-over timber land. It certainly can not be worth more than two or three dollars an acre. Only a few years ago it would not have been worth 25 cents an acre. For the purpose sought it may have a value; and it seems to me that as this bill has been recommended by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, recommended by the committee of the House, and there is no objection, so far as I understand, from any of the Departments, though it has been submitted to them, it is proper that the bill pass.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is it used for now?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is not used for anything.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield to me now for a moment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would state that the area of cut-over land in Minnesota is very large. The method of reforesting it involves a considerable expense by way of experiment. The State can better make those experiments than anybody. This is a small area of land immediately adjoining a tract owned by the State, and is a good object lesson for them to experiment upon, so that outsiders, private individuals, may get the benefit of their experiments.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him this question: If we establish the precedent of granting the States public lands for forestry purposes, has the gentleman any idea of where it is going to stop?

Mr. LACEY. Well, of course, each one of these propositions must rest upon its own bottom. This is a very small tract. Does my friend remember the area?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Eighty acres.

Mr. LACEY. Eighty acres. It is adjacent to another tract of land belonging to the State. The State tract is not quite adequate for a fair experiment, and therefore the request is made to add this additional public land, which of course might be taken up by a homesteader or by anybody or in any other way by private individuals, but it is the purpose here to give it to the State to experiment upon.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think, from my standpoint, this would be setting up a bad precedent, and I should be compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make that motion if he desires, but the Chair recognized the gentleman, as he supposed, in accordance with a previous request for asking unanimous consent touching an order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am ready to do that. I was misled by a gentleman suggesting the motion to adjourn. I did not understand the Chair. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that immediately after the reading of the Journal on Saturday, one week from the coming Saturday, the 20th day of the month, be set apart for the consideration of House bill 7056; that the same shall be a continuing order, not to take the place of appropriation bills or contested-election cases or other privileged matters, until Tuesday of the following week, and then, after six hours' debate on a side, a vote shall be taken upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that on February 20 next House bill 7056 be made a special order and continue as a special order until the following Tuesday—not to interfere with appropriation revenue, or other privileged bills—and then, after six hours' discussion on a side, the vote to be taken. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not see the senior member of the minority of that committee in his seat, but I am informed, as I catch it, that is the arrangement which he told me had been entered into.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have described it exactly as we agreed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is as I understand the arrangement that had been agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7056) creating a commission to consider and recommend legislation for the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

FIELD OPERATIONS OF THE BUREAU OF SOILS.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 41) providing for a change in the method of printing the report on field operations of the Bureau of Soils, Department of Agriculture.

Resolved, etc., That in addition to the number of copies of the report on field operations of the Bureau of Soils, Department of Agriculture, provided for by joint resolution No. 8, Fifty-sixth Congress, approved February 23, 1901, and which may hereafter be published in one or more volumes, there be printed, as soon as the manuscript can be prepared, with the necessary maps and illustrations to accompany it, a report of each area surveyed, in the form of advance sheets, of which 500 copies shall be for the use of each Senator from the State, 2,000 copies for the use of each Representative for the Congressional district or districts in which the survey is made, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CASSEL. I object.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his objection until I can make a statement. From a remark the gentleman from Pennsylvania made, I gather that he objects to the immediate consideration of this report because of the expense incident to the publication.

I will say in this connection that this amendment to the resolution now in force reduces the expense of this annual publication about 25 per cent and enables the Agricultural Department to distribute the maps and the data gathered more promptly, and makes the work more effective, and an objection will not only greatly impair the work as originally designed, but it will result in the present public resolution standing, which will carry with it an expenditure of about 25 per cent more than this amendment proposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to make a statement? If so, I think I can show the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASSEL] why this resolution ought to pass.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Just a moment. I want to say in this connection, Mr. Speaker, this is a work which has been carried on by the Agricultural Department for several years, the result being an analysis of the soils in various parts of the country, and as the law now stands the result of these analyses has not been announced to the localities interested for probably a year to eighteen months after the examination and the analysis have taken place, and this amendment provides that as soon as the report is made and the analyses received the maps shall be prepared and the distribution made with special reference to the State and Congressional district where the work is performed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and that is, if the report of the committee shows the cost of this? I could not hear all the gentleman said.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The cost of this under the public resolution as now done is annually in the neighborhood of $67,000. We believe the work when done, as proposed in this amendment, will reduce the cost about 25 per cent.

Mr. PAYNE. I am glad to get the gentleman's statement, and I want to suggest right here, in former Congresses it has been the custom of the Committee on Printing to report the probable cost when they report a bill for printing, or a resolution; and I will say to the gentleman I hope he will include that in the future, so as to be able to give the House that information.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I understand that has always been done when a report originated. This work has been going on from year to year, and the annual expenditure has been in the neighborhood of $37,000. The usual and formal estimate can not well be furnished on reports not yet in manuscript.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to state, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman who objected to this matter, that these are the facts: The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wilson, has in his Department what is known as a "Bureau of Soil Survey." His soils experts, say, will come to your district and go to other districts, and they intend to go over all the Congressional districts throughout the United States in the course of time and examine the soil, and reports are made, put upon paper, and sent in to the Secretary of Agriculture, where the work is completed and made ready to print, but, unless they are all sent in at one time, and it is impracticable and impossible to do so, the Secretary of Agriculture can not publish the books containing these reports until they are filed with him.

Now, he desires to have these reports published as they are completed here in his Department, so that they can be sent out in leaflet form to the farmers in the Congressional districts where the work has been done and sent out in a few days or weeks after it is filed in his office. Sometimes he has to wait to do so twelve months, until all the reports come in. Now, in my own district I am laboring under this very trouble. The report from Davidson County has been completed for some time, and the farmers out there are writing for it now. I asked him to give me a synopsis of it, but he could not do that. If this resolution is passed, that would be printed and all the other surveys would be printed that are now lying completed in his office which can not be published until this great book of reports is sent in and it is ready to be published.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. And in the meantime the local interest in the analyses has died out.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Exactly, and you send a report—this annual book—to Davidson County, for instance, of a survey made up in Maine, and they do not need that at all, and vice versa; but if the pamphlet is sent of Davidson County the farmers need and want it, and want it to-day, and this measure would give it to them, and so in all the surveys made.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit for the consideration of the gentleman from Pennsylvania this suggestion: This matter was carefully considered by the Committee on Agriculture, and a subcommittee was appointed by that committee to bring the subject dealt with in this resolution to the attention of the Committee on Printing and to urge its adoption in the interest of economy.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. And effectiveness.

Mr. BURLESON. The Committee on Agriculture unanimously indorsed this resolution, after giving same careful consideration, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I objected to the proposition because I objected to this amount of money being spent for this service and distributed throughout the United States, because I did not believe that it amounted to anything or was of any advantage to the farmer, but if this resolution is going to reduce expenses and save the Government any money, I will withdraw my objection. But I want to say if by any means I can cut out this part of the agricultural work I shall certainly join with anyone else in doing it, because I believe it is merely money being spent in this way unnecessarily and without result, but under the circumstances I will withdraw my objection at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his objection.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I renew it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] to call up a special order.

RED LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION, STATE OF MINNESOTA.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (S. 4490) to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, which was made a special order. I ask for the reading of the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, did, on the 10th day of March, A. D. 1902, make and conclude an agreement with the adult male Indians of the Red Lake Reservation, in the State of Minnesota; which said agreement is in words and figures as follows:

"This agreement made and entered into this 10th day of March, 1902, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States, and the Red Lake and Pembina bands of Chippewa Indians belonging on the Red Lake Reservation in the State of Minnesota, witnesseth:

"ARTICLE I. The said Indians belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., for the consideration hereinafter named, do hereby cede, surrender, grant, and convey to the United States all their claim, right, title, and interest in and to all that part of the Red Lake Indian Reservation situate within the boundaries of Red Lake County, Minn., as said county is at present defined and organized, the tract hereby ceded being more particularly described as embracing all that part of the said Red Lake Indian Reservation lying west of the range line between ranges 38 and 39 west of the fifth principal meridian, the tract of land hereby ceded approximating 256,152 acres; and also hereby agree that all of said Indians now residing on the tract hereby ceded shall remove to the diminished reservation within six months after the ratification of this agreement, and shall be paid not exceeding $5,000 in cash by the Indians of said Red Lake Reservation out of the first payment received by them from the proceeds of this cession; said $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid equitably to those thus removing, in proportion to the value of their respective improvements, which payment by said Red Lake Indians shall be in full for all improvements which they will abandon, and also for the removal within the diminished reservation of their dead from where they are now buried on the tract hereby ceded.

"ART. II. In consideration of the land ceded, relinquished, and conveyed by Article I of this agreement, the United States stipulates and agrees to pay to said Indians, in the manner hereinafter provided, the sum of $1,000,000.

"ART. III. It is understood that of the amount to be paid to said Indians, as stipulated by Article II of this agreement, the sum of $250,000 shall be paid in cash, per capita, share and share alike, to each man, woman, and child belonging on said Red Lake Indian Reservation, within ninety days after the ratification of this agreement, and the remainder of the said sum of $1,000,000, viz, $750,000, shall be paid in cash, per capita, in fifteen annual installments of $50,000 each, the first of which fifteen annual installments to be paid in the month of October of the year following that in which payment of the said $250,000 is made, as provided in this agreement, and in the month of October of each year thereafter of the succeeding fourteen years, covering the period of said fifteen annual installments.

"ART. IV. It is further agreed that the said Indians belonging on said Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., shall possess their diminished reservation independent of all other bands of the Chippewa tribe of Indians, and shall be entitled to allotments thereon of 160 acres each, of either agricultural or pine land, the different classes of land to be apportioned as equitably as possible among the allottees.

"ART. V. It is understood that nothing in this agreement shall be construed to deprive the said Indians belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., of any benefits to which they are entitled under existing treaties for agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this agreement.

"ART. VI. This agreement shall take effect and be in force when signed by United States Indian Inspector James McLaughlin and by a majority of the male adult Indians, parties hereto, and when accepted and ratified by the Congress of the United States.

"In witness whereof the said James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States, and the male adult Indians belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., have hereunto set their hands and seals at Red Lake Indian Agency, Minn., this 10th day of March, A. Whereas it is deemed for the best interests of the said Indians that said agreement be amended and modified as hereafter provided: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., ARTICLE I. The said Indians belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., for the consideration hereinafter named, do hereby cede, surrender, grant, and convey to the United States all their claim, right, title, and interest in and to all that part of the Red Lake Indian Reservation lying west of the range line between ranges 39 and 39, west of the fifth principal meridian, the tract of land hereby ceded approximating 256,152 acres, and also hereby agree that all of said Indians now residing on the tract hereby ceded shall remove to the diminished reservation within six months after the ratification of this agreement, and shall be paid not exceeding $20,000 in cash by the Indians of said Red Lake Reservation out of the first payment received by them from the proceeds of this cession, said $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid equitably to those thus removing, in proportion to the value of their respective improvements, which payment by said Red Lake Indians shall be in full for all improvements which they will abandon, and also for the removal within the diminished reservation of their dead from where they now are buried on the tract hereby ceded.

ART. II. In consideration of the land ceded, relinquished, and conveyed by Article I of this agreement the United States stipulates and agrees to sell, subject to the homestead laws of the United States, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, in tracts not to exceed 160 acres to each individual, all of said lands, except lands remaining unsold after five years from the first sale hereunder, which may be sold without reference to the provisions of the homestead law. Said lands shall be sold for not less than $4 per acre, and shall be sold upon the following terms: One-fifth of the purchase price to be paid at the time of sale and the balance of the purchase price of said land to be paid in five equal annual installments due in one, two, three, four, and five years from date of sale, respectively, and to pay over to said Indians all of the proceeds realized from the sale of said lands as herein provided.

ART. III. It is understood that of the amount realized from the sale of said lands a sum of not exceeding $300,000 shall be paid in cash per capita, share and share alike, to each man, woman, and child belonging on said Red Lake Indian Reservation within ninety days after the first sale herein provided for, and the remainder of the proceeds of the sale of said lands shall be paid in cash per capita in fifteen annual installments, the first of which fifteen annual installments is to be paid in the month of October of the year following that in which the payment of the said $300,000 is made, as provided in this agreement, and in the month of October of each year thereafter, and all moneys received after the expiration of said fifteen years shall be apportioned in like manner among said Indians and paid to them on the 1st day of October in each year.

ART. IV. It is further agreed that the said Indians belonging on the said Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., shall possess their diminished reservation independent of all other bands of the Chippewa tribe of Indians and shall be entitled to allotments thereon of 160 acres each, of either agricultural or pine land, the different classes of land to be apportioned as equitably as possible among the allottees.

ART. V. It is understood that nothing in this agreement shall be construed to deprive the said Indians belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., of any benefits to which they are entitled under existing treaties or agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this agreement. It is the intention of this agreement that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of said land and to expend and pay over the proceeds as received from the sale thereof only as received, as herein provided.

ART. VI. This agreement shall take effect and be in force when accepted and ratified by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 2. That said agreement be, and the same is hereby, accepted and ratified as herein amended.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to sell, subject to the homestead laws of the United States, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in tracts not to exceed 160 acres to each individual, all that part of the Red Lake Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, lying westerly of the range line between ranges 38 and 39 west of the fifth principal meridian, approximating 256,000 acres. And the said land shall be sold for not less than $4 per acre, and shall be sold upon the following terms: One-fifth of the price bid therefor to be paid at the time the bid is made, and the balance of the purchase price of said land to be paid in five equal annual installments, due in one, two, three, four, and five years from date of sale, respectively, payment to be made to the receiver of the United States land office for the district in which said land may be situated. And in case any purchaser fails to make such annual payments promptly when due, or within sixty days thereafter, all rights in and to the land covered by his or her purchase shall at once cease, and any payments made shall thereupon be forfeited, and the Secretary of the Interior shall thereupon declare such forfeiture by reoffering said land for sale.

And no patent shall issue to the purchaser until the purchaser shall have paid the purchase price and in all respects complied with the terms and provisions of the homestead laws of the United States: Provided, That such purchaser shall have the right of commutation, as provided by section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, by paying for the land at the price for which it sold, receiving credit for payments previously made: Provided further, That such purchaser shall make his final proof conformable to the homestead laws within six years from the date of sale; that aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States may become purchasers under this act, but before making final proof and acquiring title must take out their full naturalization papers; and that persons who may have heretofore exhausted their rights under the homestead law may become purchasers under this act: Provided further, That after the first sale hereunder shall be closed, the lands remaining unsold shall be subject to sale and entry at the price of $4 per acre by qualified purchasers, subject to the same terms and conditions as herein prescribed as to lands sold at said first sale: Provided further, That all lands above described which shall remain unsold at the expiration of five years from the date of the first sale hereunder shall be offered for sale at not less than $4 per acre (and lands remaining unsold after such sale shall be subject to private entry and sale at said price), without any conditions whatever except the payment of the purchase price: And provided further, That wherever the boundary line of said reservation runs diagonally so as to divide any Government subdivision of a section, and the owner of that portion of such subdivision now being outside of the reservation becomes the purchaser of that portion of such subdivision lying within the reservation, residence and improvements upon either portions of such subdivision as provided by the homestead law shall constitute a compliance as to all such Government subdivisions.

All of the Indians residing upon the tract above described shall remove therefrom to the diminished reservation within six months after the passage of this act; and there is hereby appropriated from the proceeds of said sale the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid to those thus removing in proportion to their respective improvements, which payment to the said Red Lake Indians shall be in full for all improvements which they will abandon, and also for the expense of removal within the diminished reservation of their dead from where they are now buried on the tract above described, and the expense of making allotments.

The proceeds of said lands as realized from time to time shall be paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of the Indians belonging on said reservation. Of the amount realized from the sale of said lands a sum not exceedings $300,000 shall be paid in cash, per capita, share and share alike, to each man, woman, and child belonging on said Red Lake Indian Reservation within ninety days after the first sale herein provided for, and the remainder of the proceeds of the sale of said lands shall be paid in cash, per capita, in fifteen annual installments, the first installment to be paid in the month of October of the year following that in which the payment of the $300,000 is made; and all moneys received after the expiration of said fifteen years shall be apportioned in like manner among said Indians and paid to them on the 1st day of October in each year.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby vested with full power and authority to make such rules and regulations as to the time of notice, manner of sale, and other matters incident to the carrying out of the provisions of this act as he may deem necessary, and with authority to continue making sale of said lands until all of said lands shall have been sold.

In addition to the price to be paid for the land, the entryman shall pay the same fees and commissions at the time of commutation or final entry as now provided by law where the price of the land is $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any portion of the land herein described, or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or any portion thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of said lands and to expend and pay over the proceeds received from the sale thereof only as received, as herein provided.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement concerning this bill. The agreement set out in the bill was negotiated—under authority of law passed in 1901—by the Secretary of the Interior, or through an Indian inspector, with these Indians. This agreement was made in March, 1902, and provided that the Indians should cede this tract of land, consisting of 256,126.28 acres, to the United States, in consideration of which the United States should pay them $1,000,000, or approximately $3.90 an acre.

The Secretary of the Interior transmitted this agreement to the last Congress and recommended that it be ratified and carried out, but for reasons well known, although the Senate passed a bill, the House of Representatives failed to do so on the ground that they did not desire to appropriate money for the purchase of Indian lands. It therefore became necessary in this case, as in the case of the Rosebud Indians of South Dakota and the Devils Lake Indians of North Dakota, to modify the agreement so that the land should be sold by the United States and the proceeds turned over to the Indians.

This modification has been made in a manner similar to that of the Rosebud and the Devils Lake reservations, which the House has already passed upon.

The bill under immediate consideration is a Senate bill, and the provisions constituting the amendment were all considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and provides for this change, so that the land shall be sold. Instead of the United States being a purchaser, it simply acts as trustee and sells the land subject to the homestead laws.

It takes no money out of the Treasury. These appropriations that are made are to be taken out of the proceeds that are derived from the sale. This land, I will say, is all agricultural land, so reported, and although there are a few marshy places it will undoubtedly bring a great deal more to the Indians when sold as provided for in this bill than it would if the United States had paid $1,000,000.

Mr. PAYNE. There is no school land set apart in this bill, and so no appropriation is made.

Mr. STEENERSON. No. No preparation was made for school lands for this reason: In the case of State of Minnesota against Hitchcock the United States Supreme Court held that Minnesota was entitled to indemnity land, and it has selected the indemnity land outside.

Mr. PAYNE. All right; let us pass the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill came from the Committee on Indian Affairs upon a unanimous report, and is in accord with the policy recently adopted to open up all Indian lands where a treaty has been properly made. The treaty in this case has been properly made, and the bill as drawn has no objectionable features.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment in the nature of a preamble was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEENERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FIFTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the day I asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9648) regulating the holding of terms of court in the fifth judicial circuit. I now find that that bill passed at an earlier day of the session. I therefore ask unanimous consent to vacate all proceedings touching that bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to vacate all proceedings had earlier in the day touching the bill (H. R. 9648) to amend the first section of an act providing that the circuit court of appeals for the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FIELD OPERATIONS OF THE BUREAU OF SOILS.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, the objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution No. 41, providing for a change in the method of printing the report on field operations of the Bureau of Soils, Department of Agriculture, has been withdrawn, and I renew my request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution No. 37, providing for the editions to be printed of the annual and special reports of the Librarian of Congress, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read, with an amendment thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all between the word "cloth," in line 6, and the word "five," in line 9; so that the resolution as amended will read as follows:

"Resolved, etc., That of the annual and special reports of the Librarian of Congress hereafter submitted to Congress, but including the report for 1903, there be printed and bound in cloth 5,000 copies for the use of the Library of Congress."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman the expense of this.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The annual expense of this publication is $2,326.35.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and the resolution was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution No. 28.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I object. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana calls for the regular order.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF CROW RESERVATION.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11676) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation, in Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect, and in that connection ask unanimous consent that the reading of the whereases of the bill be omitted and that it be read by the Clerk, commencing on line 1, page 10.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent that the Clerk omit the reading of the whereases of the bill and read only that portion of the bill indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Whereas Benjamin F. Barge, James H. McNeely, and Charles G. Hoyt, acting for and on behalf the United States, did, on the 14th day of August,

A. D. 1899, make and conclude an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation, in Montana, which said agreement is in words and figures as follows:

Whereas Benjamin F. Barge, James H. McNeely, and Charles G. Hoyt, being duly appointed as commissioners on behalf of the United States by the Secretary of the Interior under and by virtue of an act of Congress approved June 10, 1896 (29 U. S. Stat. L., p. 341), entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Bureau of the Interior Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes," and by said act being authorized to negotiate with the Crow Indians, in the State of Montana, for the cession of a portion of their reservation; and whereas the Indians residing on and having rights upon the said Crow Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, are willing to dispose of a portion of their surplus lands:

Now, therefore, this agreement made and entered into by and between the aforesaid commissioners on behalf of the United States of America and the headmen and a majority of the male adults residing upon and having rights on the Crow Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, witnesseth:

ARTICLE I. That the said Indians of the Crow Reservation do hereby cede, grant, and relinquish to the United States all right, title, and interest which they may have to the lands embraced within and bounded by the following-described lines: Beginning at the northeast corner of the said Crow Indian Reservation; thence running due south to a point lying due east of the northeast corner of the Fort Custer Military Reservation; thence running due west to the northwest corner of said Fort Custer Military Reservation; thence due south to the southwest corner of said Fort Custer Military Reservation; thence due west to the intersection of the line between sections 10 and 11, township 2 south, range 28 east of the principal meridian of Montana; thence due north to the intersection of the Montana base line; thence due west to the intersection of the western boundary of the Crow Indian Reservation; thence in a northeasterly direction, following the present boundary of said reservation, to point of beginning.

ART. II. That in consideration of the land ceded, granted, and relinquished as aforesaid, the United States stipulates and agrees to pay to and expend for the Indians of the said reservation $1,150,000, in the following manner, to wit:

Ninety thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the extension and completion, including the necessary laterals, of the system of irrigation now being constructed on said reservation.

Ten thousand dollars shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the building, extension, or completion of individual Indian ditches: Provided, That none of the above sum shall be expended without the knowledge and consent of the Indian agent.

One hundred thousand dollars shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Crow Indians as a trust fund, the same to remain in the Treasury for fifteen years, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, said interest to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in maintaining and managing said irrigation system.

Provided further, That at the expiration of the fifteen years above mentioned such disposition shall be made of said fund as the Indians, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, may determine.

Two hundred and forty thousand dollars shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the purchase of 2-year-old southern heifers, the same to be placed upon the Crow Indian Reservation, and added to the present herd now owned in common by the Crow tribe of Indians.

Additional amounts may be expended for cattle from time to time at the request of the Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Provided further, That during the year 1902 all cattle owned at that time in common by the Crow tribe of Indians shall be divided equally between said Indians, share and share alike to every man, woman, and child having rights upon the Crow Reservation.

Fifteen thousand dollars shall be spent in the purchase of jackasses or stallions, either or both, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, the same to be placed upon the Crow Reservation for the benefit of the Crow Indians.

Ten thousand dollars shall be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in the erection and furnishing of a hospital at the agency for the benefit of the Crow Indians.

Fifty thousand dollars shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Crow tribe of Indians as a trust fund, and shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, said interest to be used, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to cover necessary expenses of maintaining said hospital.

Fifty thousand dollars shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Crow tribe of Indians, the same to be expended for their benefit from time to time by the Secretary of the Interior, in such manner as he may direct.

Three thousand dollars, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated and set apart to pay the expenses of ten Crow Indians, two interpreters, and the agent to visit Washington at such time as permission is received from the Secretary of the Interior.

The balance of the principal sum due the Crow Indians under this agreement shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to their credit as a trust fund and shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum; said interest to be added annually to the principal and an annual annuity payment of $12 per capita shall be paid, in cash, to every man, woman, and child having rights upon the reservation; said annuity to be paid semiannually in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Provided further, That $200,000 of the last-named sum may be expended in the further purchase of cattle or sheep should a majority of the Indians so decide and the same be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Provided further, That when each object for which a specific appropriation has been made in this agreement shall have been fully carried out and completed then the balance remaining of said appropriation may be expended for the benefit of the Crow tribe or placed to their credit in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may determine.

It is further agreed that in the construction of ditches, dams, canals, and fences that no contract shall be awarded nor employment given to other than Crow Indians, or whites intermarried with them, except that any Indian employed in construction may hire white men to work for him if he so desires.

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the employment of such engineers or other skilled employees or to prevent the employment of white labor where it is impracticable for the Crows to perform the same.

None of the money due to the said Indians under this agreement shall be subject to the payment of any claims, judgments, [or] demands against said Indians for damages or depredations claimed to have been committed prior to the signing of this agreement.

ART. III. All lands upon that portion of the reservation hereby granted, ceded, and relinquished which have, prior to the date of this agreement, been allotted in severalty to Indians of the Crow tribe shall be reserved for said Indians, or where any Indians have homes on such lands they shall not be removed therefrom without their consent, and those not allotted may receive allotments on the lands they now occupy. But in case any prefer to move they may select land elsewhere on that portion of said reservation not hereby ceded, granted, or relinquished and not occupied by any other Indians, and should they decide not to move their improvements then the same may be sold for their benefit, said sale to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the cash proceeds shall be paid to the Indian or Indians whose improvements shall be so sold.

ART. IV. That for the purpose of segregating the ceded lands from the diminished reservation the new boundary lines described in Article I of this agreement shall, when necessary, be properly surveyed and permanently marked in a plain and substantial manner by prominent and durable monuments, the cost of said survey to be paid by the United States.

ART. V. The water from streams on that portion of the reservation now sold, which is necessary for irrigating on land actually cultivated and in use, shall be reserved for the Indians now using the same so long as said Indians remain where they now live.

ART. VI. It is further agreed that a statement of all expenditures under the various provisions of this agreement shall be sent to the agent of the Crow Indians twice a year, or at such times as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, showing the amounts expended and the balance remaining on hand in each of the several funds.

ART. VII. The existing provisions of all former treaties with the Crow tribe of Indians not inconsistent with the provisions of this agreement, are hereby continued in force and effect, and all provisions thereof inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

ART. VIII. This agreement shall take effect and be in force when signed by the commissioners and a majority of the male Indians of the Crow tribe over 18 years of age, and ratified by the Congress of the United States, and should any article in the agreement fail of confirmation by Congress, then the whole shall be null and void.

And the various expenditures and payments required to be made under the provisions of this article shall be made as the funds therefor are available as herein provided, and shall be prorated, apportioned, and made in such proportions and amounts as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior the needs and requirements of the Indians and their best interests shall warrant and demand.

"ART. III. All lands upon that portion of the reservation hereby granted, ceded, and relinquished which have, prior to the date of this agreement, been allotted in severalty to Indians of the Crow tribe shall be reserved for said Indians, or where any Indians have homes on such lands they shall not be removed therefrom without their consent, and those not allotted may receive allotments on the lands they now occupy. The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution of the legislature of Ohio, praying Congress to locate the proposed naval training station on the Great Lakes on Put in Bay (South Bass) Island, Lake Erie; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution asking Congress to locate naval training station at Put in Bay, Ohio.

Whereas the attention of the general assembly of Ohio has been called to legislation now pending in Congress of the United States in furtherance of the legislation enacted June 30, 1902, proposing the establishment of a naval training station at some point upon the chain of Great Lakes; and

Whereas the members of the general assembly of Ohio, having in mind the general requirements indicated in the order of the honorable Secretary of the Navy, dated July 5, 1902, as most needful in a location for the proposed naval training station, and having in view the local conditions deemed essential for such a location, respectfully invite the attention of Congress to Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, as a location preeminently fitted to meet all such physical requirements, and, furthermore, we believe that the historic associations of this locality, remembrance of which will forever fire the hearts of our people with patriotism and pride, would be an inspiration to that essential devotion to duty and esprit de corps so desirable to be developed in our young citizens: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized and earnestly invited to locate the naval training station, which it proposes to establish at some point upon the chain of Great Lakes, on Put in Bay (South Bass) Island, Lake Erie, not only because of the superior physical advantages this location offers, but also as a fitting tribute to the memory and achievements of that loyal officer and citizen, Commodore Perry, and his heroic command; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from Ohio in the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested to urge Congress to adopt such legislation as may be necessary to secure the establishment of said proposed naval training station on said island.

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Ohio transmit immediately upon the passage of this resolution a copy thereof to the Senate of the United States, and to the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the Representatives of Ohio therein.

It is the joint resolution which was introduced by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and which I reported day before yesterday, when, after discussion, I withdrew the report. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, when the joint resolution was brought before the Senate a few days ago, the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] made some very pertinent inquiries; and as it had been nearly two years since I had closely examined the matter I suggested that it might go over. I should like now to answer the inquiries then made.

The Senator from Maine stated, what we all acknowledge to be the correct view of the case, that the man who prepares a digest should be a lawyer; that he should be a good lawyer, and preferably one who has had some experience in such work.

He also suggested an inquiry as to whether or not the man who prepared this work was, during the time of such preparation, in the employ of the Government. I will state that the digest was prepared by Mr. Chapman W. Maupin, a lawyer, who is at present law clerk in the Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury. He was appointed a clerk on the temporary roll in the Treasury Department in 1898, and commenced this digest work about that time. Later on, by a clause in an appropriation act, I believe, the position of law clerk in the Solicitor's office was provided for, and Mr. Maupin was appointed to fill the position.

Prior to his employment by the Government, Mr. Maupin practiced law in the District of Columbia. While so practicing he prepared the digest, which I hold in my hand, of the decisions and reports of the courts of the District of Columbia, covering a period from 1790 to 1898. This digest was prepared and submitted to the Bar Association of the District, and after making use of the typewritten copy for about a year it was adopted by that association, the expenses assumed, and its publication provided for, the association paying Mr. Maupin in some 400 copies of the work as finally finished, bound in sheep.

I do not see the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] in his seat at the present moment, but I notice that in his work, "Daniel on Negotiable Instruments," he was assisted by Mr. Maupin, and that the valuable work done by him is properly acknowledged in the preface to the fourth edition, as follows:

> In the collection and digest of cases for this edition, I have been greatly assisted by the diligent and discriminating labors of my valued friend, Mr. Chapman W. Maupin, of the Bedford City bar, to whom I render my acknowledgments.

I observe also that Mr. Maupin is the author of a legal work entitled, "Maupin on Marketable Title to Real Estate," etc., the book which I now exhibit.

His present work—the digest in question—is recommended by the Court of Claims through its chief justice. It is recommended by the Solicitor of the Treasury Department, by the Comptroller of the Treasury Department, by the Attorney-General, and others, and I have here some letters which came in this morning's mail, unsolicited by me, brought out probably through parties having read the remarks made the other day in the Senate respecting the joint resolution. These letters are all commendatory of the work and of Mr. Maupin, its author. I submit three of them, as follows:

COURT OF CLAIMS CHAMBERS,
Washington, February 11, 1908.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Senate Committee on Claims.

SIR: I have read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday the remarks in the Senate relating to the publication of the Court of Claims Digest, prepared by Mr. Chapman W. Maupin.

I am informed that the letters heretofore written by myself, the Attorney-General, and others to your committee recommending the publication of this digest by the Government have been mislaid and can not now be found. Were they to be had they would show the grounds upon which we have advised the publication of the digest.

Judging from the use of the digest in a typewritten form, and from the manner in which Mr. Maupin's District of Columbia Digest has been received by the bench and bar of the District, I believe that the Court of Claims Digest prepared by him, when completed, with amendments which I have suggested to him, will be acceptable and satisfactory to the court and a very great assistance to the legal profession, and especially so to those who do not reside in the city of Washington and who do not possess a complete set of the Court of Claims Reports, now numbering 38 volumes.

Respectfully,

CHARLES C. NOTT,
Chief Justice.

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1908.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Maupin, who prepared the Court of Claims Digest, the publication of which is before the Senate for consideration, is a law clerk in this office. It seems proper for me to state that the preparation of the digest would not come within the scope of Mr. Maupin's duties, and also that his preparation of the digest has in no degree interfered with his official duties.

I take the liberty to further say that Mr. Maupin is an able and painstaking lawyer, and has always been a diligent and valuable man in this Bureau. I would not be putting it too strong if I should say that in my judgment there has never been one who has been worth more to the Department.

He has had large experience in work of this kind, having been a member of the editorial staff of the West Publishing Company and having also done work in preparing for publication the American and English Encyclopedia of Law. As a maker of briefs he is as valuable as any lawyer I have ever known. If you will look at the preface to the fourth edition of "Daniel on Negotiable Instruments," you will learn in what esteem he is held by the Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL, Senator from Virginia.

Very respectfully,

MAURICE D. O'CONNELL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1908.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have just read with much interest the discussion in the Senate yesterday on Senate joint resolution 41, to provide for the printing of a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, etc.

With reference to the inquiry which was made whether there is not already a digest in existence, I will state that the facts in regard to that are as follows:

The last digest prepared of the decisions of the Court of Claims, and the only one now in existence, was gotten up nearly thirty years ago. The officially published edition has the date 1876 on the backing. As a matter of fact, the last volume digested is the tenth, which ends in 1875, and the title page of the digest shows that it ends with that year. Since the publication of that digest twenty-eight more volumes of the decisions of the Court of Claims have been published. The last volume, just recently out of press, is the thirty-eighth, and a number of decisions have already been rendered which will form a part of the thirty-ninth volume.

The decisions rendered since those covered by the existing digest therefore constitute about three-quarters of the total number of decisions of the court, and being later are of course by far the most important for those having occasion to examine the decisions of the court. It is impossible at present to ascertain the existence of a decision on a given point without an examination of the separate indexes of all the volumes, and even then the decision is apt to be missed in the course of examination of such a number of separate indexes.

I have had occasion to look through the digest named in the pending joint resolution. While I have not given it a critical examination, I am satisfied, both from such examination as I have made and from the character of work previously done by its editor in digesting our local reports, that it is a useful and valuable publication.

Hoping these suggestions may be of some assistance to you in the matter, I am,

Very truly, yours, GEORGE A. KING.

This work was commenced contemporaneously with Mr. Maupin's employment by the Government, and was done during evenings, holidays, on leave, and at odd times. These two books now in my hand, which have been borrowed from the Court of Claims, represent a part of the completed typewritten work. This typewritten work is now being used continually by the Court of Claims. The balance of the work brings the manuscript digest up to date, or nearly so, and is in loose, typewritten sheets, additional to the books which I exhibit.

Mr. HALE. That does not represent the form in which the digest is to be published?

Mr. WARREN. Not at all; it is the manuscript.

Mr. HALE. But it is the manuscript, typewritten copy?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

I wish to answer further in relation to the inquiry made by the Senator from Maine, which I considered a proper one to have been made and one that should be answered.

He asked, "What is the present condition as to digest of the Court of Claims?" The thirty-eighth volume of reports, to May, 1903, has just been published. The only digest in existence is the small book which I have here in hand, and which covers the first ten volumes only. This digest which we propose to publish covers all the work done—the decisions from the establishment of the court up to this date. It includes the entire thirty-eight volumes.

Judge Nott, in his letter already submitted, speaks of former letters written me which have in some way gone astray. Since I can not just now find them I will submit in their place four letters written to Mr. Maupin, one to Representative GRAFF, chairman of the House Committee on Claims, and copies of a couple of letters to me.

I will not read these letters now unless the Senator from Maine desires it. I shall be glad to have them go into the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

[Letter from Chief Justice Nott.]

COURT OF CLAIMS CHAMBERS,
Washington, December 21, 1900.

CHAPMAN W. MAUPIN,
Office Solicitor of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The judges have examined with great interest your Digest of the Court of Claims Reports in typewritten form, and, so far as their examinations have gone, give the work their unqualified approval.

Nothing has been published of the kind since the digest of 1876, which included only the first ten of the present thirty-five volumes. The work is wanted by members of the bar, but still more by the accounting and disbursing officers of the Government. They rely upon the decisions of the courts as their absolute guide of all matters of contract and governmental liability, and thirty-five volumes are more than the ordinary executive officer can examine when a new question arises or master for the ordinary discharge of his duties.

In this connection I call your attention to the thirty-fifth volume, which is now in print. It should, if possible, be incorporated in the digest. If it is not possible for you to do so, certainly some decisions which modify or overrule previous cases should be noted in the digest. For instance, under Court of Claims II, jurisdiction in general, 16, the digest says: "It is not necessary that a claim shall be rejected by the accounting officer before an action can be brought," etc. But in Collins's case (35 C. Cls., 146) you will find that that is not the law in such cases as Ravesies (the case cited by you) at the present time.

It will doubtless be a convenience to accounting and disbursing officers and to the bar throughout the country if you will insert at the beginning of the book the statutes still in force which relate to the jurisdiction of the court, viz, the Revised Statutes, the act 4th July, 1864 (not repealed by the Revised Statutes), the Bowman Act, the French spoliation act, the Tucker Act, and the Indian depredation act.

Respectfully, etc., CHARLES C. NOTT.

[Letter from Comptroller of the Treasury.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, December 28, 1900.

CHAPMAN W. MAUPIN, Esq.,
Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury.

SIR: I have given your Digest of the Court of Claims Reports, in typewritten form, a hasty examination, and in so far as I am able to judge from this examination it is a most excellent work and will fill a long-felt want of the accounting officers of the Treasury.

The plan of the work is most excellent, and it will no doubt prove an invaluable aid to those of us who are interested and governed to a large extent by the decisions of the Court of Claims.

If you will pardon a suggestion, I would advise that blank leaves and pages be left in the back, so that its users may be enabled to keep it up to date by indexing and digesting therein the decisions of the courts as they subsequently appear under their proper headings and indexes.

Yours, truly, R. J. TRACEWELL,
Comptroller.

[Letter from Auditor of the Treasury.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 5, 1901.

Mr. CHAPMAN W. MAUPIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have examined your Digest of the Court of Claims Reports and cheerfully recommend it as a valuable production.

I hope that suitable provision will be made to supply the accounting offices with copies of the work. Its use would greatly economize time and labor and also increase the efficiency of the service in the examination and settlement of accounts.

Yours, very truly, W. E. ANDREWS, Auditor.

COURT OF CLAIMS,
Washington, D. C., May 15, 1901.

DEAR SIR: Is the Digest which you showed us last winter in course of publication; and if so, when will it be issued? If it has not been published, what would it cost you to furnish the court with a typewritten copy such as you exhibited to us?

Respectfully, C. C. NOTT.

CHAPMAN W. MAUPIN, Esq.,
Treasury Department.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, January 26, 1903.

Mr. CHAPMAN W. MAUPIN,
Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 23d instant is before me. The manuscript volumes of the Court of Claims Digest, which it is proposed be published by Congress, is now on file in this office, and should the House Committee on Printing desire them, they are available for its use and will be delivered upon request. The papers accompanying the resolution are on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and they likewise are available to the House Committee.

Yours, very truly, A. H. HOWE, Clerk.

[Letter from Attorney-General.]

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., March 28, 1903.

Hon. JOSEPH V. GRAFF,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

SIR: I have recently had submitted to my consideration the manuscript of a Digest of the Decisions of the Court of Claims covering thirty-five volumes of the reports of that court (the thirty-sixth volume having recently been published since this manuscript was completed), together with all the decisions of the Supreme Court relating to claims against the United States. Accompanying the same was a copy of a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Claims of the Senate from Hon. C. C. Nott, chief justice of the Court of Claims, who has been a member of that court since February, 1865; a copy of a letter of the Comptroller of the Treasury, Hon. R. J. Tracewell, to the chairman of the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, and a letter from Mr. James A. Finch, the librarian of the Department of Justice, addressed to Mr. Chapman W. Maupin, the author of the digest.

In all of these communications the digest is very highly commended and the need of such a work strongly set forth. The digest has also been examined by the Assistant Attorney-General who is charged with the defense of suits in the Court of Claims, and he joins in these indorsements of the character of the work and in the opinion that its publication will prove of great practical use to many officials of the Government.

I am satisfied that these recommendations are fully warranted, and I accordingly recommend a joint resolution providing for the printing of the digest.

Very respectfully, P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

[Copy of letter from Chief Justice Nott.]

COURT OF CLAIMS CHAMBERS,
Washington, January 21, 1902.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

SIR: In 1876 I prepared a digest of the Court of Claims decisions, embracing the first ten volumes of the reports and including the decisions of the Supreme Court in claims cases, and with this communication I send a copy of that digest. Having everything relating to the adjudication of claims against the United States in one volume and the statutes relating to the jurisdiction of the court, etc., it was found to be a most useful book, not only by the bar, but also by the accounting and disbursing officers of the Government, including those of the Quartermaster and Commissary departments, and even by members of the Committees on Claims of the two Houses of Congress. Since then no digest of the decisions has been published.

Mr. Chapman W. Maupin, who published a Digest of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, has recently prepared a digest on the lines of my digest, above alluded to, which embraces the thirty-five volumes of the Court of Claims decisions and all of the decisions of the Supreme Court relating to claims against the United States. We esteem this so highly that, with Mr. Maupin's consent, we have had a typewritten copy made for the use of the court.

I am now informed that the Comptroller of the Treasury has recommended its publication by Congress for the use of the accounting and disbursing officers of the Government. So far as the judges are concerned, the fact that one of them has been on the bench since 1865, and their familiarity with their own decisions enables them to get along, with more or less inconvenience, without the publication of such a digest; but it certainly will be of very great assistance to the bar, and especially to lawyers who do not reside in the city of Washington, and who really have no practicable means for finding out what has been decided in regard to the legal liabilities of the Government.

Very respectfully, C. C. NOTT.

[Copy of letter sent by Comptroller to Senate Committee on Claims.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, June 9, 1902.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman of the Senate Committee on Claims.

SIR: I have examined the Digest of the Decisions of the Court of Claims, prepared by Mr. Chapman W. Maupin, of this city.

Such a digest is much needed, particularly by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department and by all officers of the Government charged with the duty of making public contracts. I will require ten copies for this division of the Treasury Department.

I am satisfied that Mr. Maupin's work has been thoroughly and accurately done, and would recommend that it be printed under the authority of Congress.

Very respectfully, ROBERT J. TRACEWELL,
Comptroller of the Treasury.

I am sending to the desk a memorandum of the action taken in the Senate during the last Congress. The memorandum was as follows:

DIGEST OF COURT OF CLAIMS DECISIONS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 126) to provide for the printing of a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, together with the rules of practice of and the statutes relating to that court, to report it favorably with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, in line 12 on page 1, before the word "copies," to fill the blank with "one thousand;" and in line 3 on page 2 to fill the blank before "dollars" with "two thousand five hundred;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

"Resolved, etc., That there be printed a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, including the statutes relating to, and the rules of practice of, that court, prepared by Chapman W. Maupin; that there be printed 500 copies for the use of the Treasury Department, 2,000 copies for the use of the Attorney-General, 250 copies for the use of the War Department, 250 copies for the use of the Navy Department, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for public sale, the whole edition to be bound in sheep; said digest to be printed under the editorial supervision of Chapman W. Maupin, the preparation and editing of said digest by him to be paid for, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at a price not to exceed the sum of $2,500, which sum is hereby appropriated in full payment for said work, except the cost of printing and binding the same, and shall not be payable until said work shall have been printed; nor shall any money be paid out on account of said work until the Court of Claims, or some member thereof, shall certify that the work, as completed, is satisfactory to that court."

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARREN. As to the matter of binding, I assume that a work of this value should be well bound. I have for a great many years—in fact, all my life—seen law books bound in sheep or calf. I can scarcely go into a law library or a lawyer's office where I do not see shelves filled with books bound in that form. My idea in proposing in the joint resolution that this digest should be bound in calf or sheep was that it might not take the usual course of being bound in paper or without board covers, as public documents are often issued. I assumed that Senators who desire to have a morocco-bound copy would still have the same right and privilege which now exists respecting other documents.

Now, I have no choice as to the binding, and if those who use law books more than I do, and who believe this work should have a better binding than that proposed, will offer some amendment, I shall not oppose it.

I think that this work ought to be printed, and I think the amount of $2,500 is but small compensation to the man who has compiled it, and has spent six years in its preparation, and who will, under the joint resolution, be required to edit, proof read, and oversee the work until it is completed. I think the work should not be confined, as it is now, to typewritten copies for the court only.

As the Senator from Maine will understand, the Committee on Claims has constant use for the decisions of the Court of Claims, and a digest is of great value, and it seems to me it is also of great value to other committees and to the several Departments of the Government.

The letters submitted set forth that it is important not only to the courts, but to the various Departments.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wyoming has made out a good case. He has shown that while we have been publishing the reports of the Court of Claims from year to year, there is no good digest; that there is only an old and very incomplete digest. Every lawyer and every student of law knows that reports are good for nothing without good digests. I think the Senator has established that proposition.

I think, also, he has shown that this compilation has been undertaken by a competent man—a lawyer who has had private practice and has had service in the Departments of a legal and important kind—and that he can do the work well.

I believe the Senator has shown that the cost is not unreasonable. With the joint resolution as it is, the digest being bound, as all law reports are, in sheep, I am satisfied that the point raised by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] does not need to be taken care of, and every Senator can have his copy or two copies bound in morocco. With the joint resolution providing for good binding in sheep, as is the case with all other law reports, I shall make no further objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am not quite sure that the joint resolution provides for the full compensation of the author and editor of this book. I think that is a little indistinct as provided for in the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. Let that part be read and let us see.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The entire joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, including the statutes relating to and the rules of practice of that court, prepared by Chapman W. Maupin; that there be printed 500 copies for the use of the Treasury Department, 2,000 copies for the use of the Attorney-General, 250 copies for the use of the War Department, 250 copies for the use of the Navy Department, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for public sale, the whole edition to be bound in sheep; said digest to be printed under the editorial supervision of Chapman W. Maupin, the preparation and editing of said digest by him to be paid for, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at a price not to exceed the sum of $2,500, which sum is hereby appropriated in full payment for said work, except the cost of printing and binding the same, and shall not be payable until said work shall have been printed; nor shall any money be paid out on account of said work until the Court of Claims, or some member thereof, shall certify that the work, as completed, is satisfactory to that court.

Mr. HOAR. Who is to determine the amount to be paid? It says a sum not exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars. Now, who is to determine that?

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is a defect, also.

Mr. HOAR. Should it not also state who shall have the copyright, who shall own the book?

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know anything about the merits of this work, but there has been great discussion of late years regarding the claim of a copyright in a Government work, as the Senator knows very well.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me that the provision for payment is rather vague. It does not state distinctly whether this sum is to be paid to Mr. Maupin for his services or to be paid for clerical and other work that he is to secure in the preparation of the digest. I think the joint resolution ought to provide that whatever sum we appropriate shall be in full for his services and labor in the preparation of the work and in reading the proof.

Mr. WARREN. The intention is that it shall be in full payment, and if the Senator will suggest an amendment such as he thinks would cover it, I would be very glad to support it.

Mr. ALLISON. It reads:

Said digest to be printed under the editorial supervision of Chapman W. Maupin, the preparation and editing of said digest by him to be paid for.

I should say "a sum not exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars." I think he ought to be paid for all services the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars. It should read:

Said digest to be printed under the editorial supervision of Chapman W. Maupin, who shall prepare——

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator from Wyoming had better let the joint resolution go over for a day.

Mr. ALLISON. I think so. We ought to fix the amount Mr. Maupin is to receive for all the work he does in connection with the digest.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the amendment which has been suggested may be adopted. I do not like to have the joint resolution get into a position where it will go to the Calendar. If it can lie over without losing its place, very well. The matter is important and there should not be unnecessary delay.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. To be perfected and taken up at a later hour, I suggest.

Mr. ALLISON. That certainly can be done. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator's request.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may go over without prejudice until to-morrow, to be taken up then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the joint resolution may go over until to-morrow and then be taken up for consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. Without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

TITLES OF BILLS AMENDING STATUTES.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] for a moment.

I was the subject yesterday of a slight criticism from that Senator, because of a bill which I introduced to amend the statutes. He said, and very justly said, that the title of a bill should state its character and purpose, and if to amend the statutes it should state in what regard, i. e., the title should convey the meaning or effect in some degree of the proposed measure. I had not been as well informed, perhaps, as I should have been in the proprieties of legislation.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I did not even know that he had introduced the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that.

Mr. HOAR. I stated that that had been a very general practice. I have no doubt I have been at fault, not as to bills which

I have prepared myself, but sometimes bills have been sent to me from the Department and elsewhere and I have introduced them without correcting the title. I do not think the Senator is in fault more than anyone else.

Mr. WARREN. I understood that, but I wanted to show to the Senator the true situation. I introduced my bill among the first days of February. Yesterday was the 11th day of February. I call the attention of the Senate now to a bill which the senior Senator from Massachusetts himself introduced on the 10th day of February, the title of which is "A bill to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes," and that is all there is to its title.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I will say what is not in the least an excuse, for it is no excuse—I have myself been a very grave offender in this matter. In point of fact, there are bills sent to me from the Department of Justice as chairman of the Judiciary Committee. When my clerk receives them he puts them into the desk with bills to be introduced, and I introduce them and send them up in a bundle of bills sometimes, never looking at them myself at all. That is the way this bill got in. But I do not understand that that is any excuse. It is not like Adam saying that the woman did it. It is my fault not to have looked at the bill myself.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This little incident is out of order entirely.

Mr. WARREN. Yes, I know; but I ask unanimous consent for a moment, because I think this is an important matter. I may have introduced a bill that was sent to me from the War Department in the manner in which it came to me, and the Senator on the following day, or several days following, may have introduced one that came to him from the Department of Justice in the same way. But the Senator, on the very day following an act of that kind, undertook to effect a reform, and did, I believe, a good service to the Senate in exposing a wrong practice. I take it he did not blame me—and the Senator says that he did not—though I was the author of the bill, or I introduced it, and I do not blame him for doing the very same thing at about the very same time; but as the matter is up I want to say that his suggestion was a most excellent one, and I only instance his fault—as well as my own—to show how prevalent is the practice.

In my opinion the Senator is right. Every bill should state in its title the purpose of the bill, in addition to stating the section of the statute it proposes to amend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2402) to secure sanitary dairy products for the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6289) to provide for the abatement of nuisances in the District of Columbia by the Commissioners of said District, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 810) to authorize the detail of George F. Ormsby in the interest of commerce, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LONG, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3205) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire the title to lands within certain Indian reservations, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6345) for the relief of the State of Iowa, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4280) providing for medals of honor, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. PETTUS) submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 4164) to amend section 1209 of the Revised Statutes, heretofore reported.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced a bill (S. 4332) granting an increase of pension to Durbin L. Badley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4333) granting an increase of pension to Orlando J. Ralph; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 4334) for the relief of the administrator of the estate of Gotlob Groezinger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PURCHASE FROM NEW PANAMA CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire, in pursuance of the notice I gave yesterday, to call up Senate resolution 57, for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it, which I will be compelled, in consideration of my condition, to ask my friend from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] to read. I will take the floor for that purpose. It is not necessary to have the resolution read. It has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama calls up a resolution which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Resolution No. 57, submitted by Mr. MORGAN December 15, 1903, calling upon the Attorney-General to report whether he has made, or is making, on behalf of the United States a purchase from the New Panama Canal Company of any property rights, etc., that were granted by the Republic of Colombia to N. B. Wyse, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hopes that the Senate will be in order. The Senator from Alabama is troubled as to his throat, and the Senate ought to be quiet.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from Alabama requests that I may be permitted to read his speech for him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MORGAN'S speech was read by Mr. CARMACK, as follows:

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, much weight is given to the untoward and painful condition in which the country is placed by the devotion of the President, or, more properly, his infatuation, as to the location of the isthmian canal at Panama in excusing his plain and express disobedience of law, with the assertion that his actions are always heroically patriotic and his motives are an open book to be read of all men.

If open and defiant disobedience of law can be thus justified, I would, for one, add my tribute of indulgent praise for a reckless act done for a worthy cause, if the act was, indeed, unselfish and if the cause was worthy of the espousal of an American President.

The President, when he was first placed in reach of the power to influence the location of an isthmian canal, resolved that it should be constructed at Panama. Whether this resolve was wise or merely heroic, it was fixed and admitted of no opposition. It was his opinion; and I leave to him the task, in history and in our future experience, to justify it at his own risk, and am glad that I will not share with him any of its responsibilities.

If I had time to array against his conjectures the sedate judgment of multitudes of able and honest men who have devoted many years, at great public and private expense, to the demonstration of the idleness of his convictions, no such array of witnesses has ever appeared on such an occasion to contest a fatal delusion.

In governmental actions, carefully based upon explorations and official surveys of the two routes by men of the highest scientific ability, four Presidents—Grant, Arthur, Harrison, and McKinley—have decided against him on occasions and under circumstances of grave deliberation and have recorded their convictions in conclusive executive action.

Among these he stands alone and defiant, doubtless, to his profound satisfaction.

Among the Secretaries of State not one of any party gives support in his written opinion to the President's attitude, unless the present Secretary may do so. I would not inflict upon him the misfortune of saying that he does.

Every report of every committee in Congress, of which there are many, is adverse to the choice of the President for the Panama route. Among these reports are those of great and wise statesmen, such as Edmunds, Evarts, Brown, and Sherman. Every commission, of which there have been five, that has examined or surveyed canal lines in Central America has reported adversely to the choice of the President, and the Senate and the House of Representatives, in four different Congresses, have voted against the President's choice, in favor of the Nicaragua route, by such majorities as no great question ever commanded in successive and detached votes.

The Isthmian Canal Commission chosen by President McKinley, upon whose preliminary report he entered into compacts with Nicaragua and Costa Rica that are still binding agreements, reported twice in favor of the Nicaragua route and have twice stated under oath the facts upon which those reports were based.

Their final report was made in November, 1901, to the present Executive, who made no recommendation to Congress, as the statute expressly required him to do. The first Hepburn bill had passed the House in the Fifty-sixth Congress, after earnest discussion and in defiance of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, by the vote of the entire body with the exception of 26 votes.

President McKinley, using the language of that bill, on December 1, 1900, had made the compacts with Costa Rica and Nicaragua that granted to us all that the Hepburn bill proposed to acquire.

The second Hepburn bill passed the House of Representatives in the Fifty-seventh Congress with only 2 votes in the negative, was sent to the Senate, referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and was reported back to the Senate with the votes of three distinguished Republican Senators in the affirmative.

Up to that time, and up to the beginning of the extra session of Congress in November, 1903, there had never been any known effort at party alignment on any feature of the isthmian canal question. No other great question was ever so free from the influence of party organization or partisan politics.

This was a happy augury for the country, and was more conspicuously a subject of congratulation because the Democratic party in the convention at Kansas City, under the leadership of the chairman of the executive committee, had pronounced in favor of the Nicaragua route.

No political power was then great enough to make a political question of an isthmian canal.

When the second Hepburn bill passed the House of Representatives, after full discussion, in favor of the Nicaragua route, no great measure had ever received from Congress or the people such demonstrative and united support in all the history of the country.

After that the President waited two years before he made known to Congress his preference for the Panama route and his determination that a canal should be constructed there and that no canal should be opened on the Nicaragua route.

In his annual message to Congress in December, 1903, the President gave the first official statement of his views and determination as to the location and construction of an isthmian canal at Panama. In that message he submitted no information or advice to Congress with a view to its action on the canal question.

He merely announced his determination to secure by treaty the consent of the Senate to a certain state of facts that he had created, in part, contrary to law, by his will and exertion as the Chief Executive of the United States and as the Commander in Chief of its Army and Navy and, in part, by the diplomatic fiction that the head of the Government, republican in form, has the prerogative power to create facts, conditions, estoppels, and results that are conclusive on Congress and the people and are beyond their power to question or deny.

In an explanatory message, a few days later, he stated in substance that it had been his purpose to submit the question of the location of the canal at Panama to Congress, and to ask its advice on the subject; but later he concluded to proceed in what he had done without such assistance. The flattering siren of absolutism had then sounded its trumpet in his ears.

The frank avowal to Congress of this purpose to enforce his will as the absolute ruler of the destiny of the Republic is quite beyond the American idea of imperial power and royal immunity.

No American holding the trust of public office, and especially the office of President of the United States, has been suspected of entertaining purposes, thus avowed, that would cost the King of Great Britain his crown if not his head.

The apparent innocence and naïveté of the declaration would never screen him among a people whose previous oppressions would remind them of the danger to the country of a ruler who openly violates the law.

In their consciousness of liberty secured by law they are too content to suspect that more than the spectacular play of campaign politics is meant by such heroic exhibitions.

It is the self-reliance of a self-governing people that, alone, saves them from the rudest shock and the angry expression of resentment at such official announcements.

Yet this message is applauded by the President's political associates on the floor of the Senate as the brave announcement of a man whose political course is animated with the courage of a brave heart that is an open book that all men may read.

On the facts of this case as they are shown by the record I must deny that the conduct of the President in this matter has been that of a true knight who wears his heart on his sleeve.

If the followers of a Republican President are willing to march in the procession of lawbreakers, with bowed heads and disapproving consciences, because he is supposed to control the next nomination for the Presidency, they need not expect a free people to follow them for the sake of party harmony. Being Americans, they are in harmony with the Constitution and the laws, not with those who openly disobey them and contemptuously spurn them.

The period of two years, from January, 1902, to January, 1904, was occupied by the President in the development of his plans to overrule and break down all that had been done by his predecessor, Mr. McKinley, and by Congress and the engineers, the canal commissions, and the people in the location of the canal on the Nicaragua route and its location at Panama, in the positive disobedience of the Spooner law.

These plans and purposes were as fixed in his mind in January, 1902, as he has declared them to be in January, 1904, at which date he made his first official declaration and his first intimation of his purpose and of the full development of his plan.

His plan was not completed until November 3, 1903. From that date he rushed it into execution by assuming powers in violation of the Constitution, the law of nations, the statute laws of neutrality of the United States, and by violating the express mandate of the Spooner law.

That law was enacted for the purpose of locating and beginning the construction of an isthmian canal without further legislation, and it located the canal either on the Panama or the Nicaraguan route. It was so understood. It was so accepted on all sides, and its provisions were adequate to that purpose in every particular.

There is no obscurity or flaw in that act, and the President has found no loophole in its provisions that he can suggest as a reason or excuse for his direct and open violation of its provisions. Even the mooted question of his discretion as to a "reasonable time" for opening negotiations with Nicaragua and Costa Rica or as to a reasonable time for acquiring canal concessions at Panama by treaty with Colombia is disposed of in his annual message of December, 1903, in which he says:

> As matters turned out, the question of a reasonable time did not enter into the matter at all.

Matters turned out as he had determined they should turn out, and not as that law contemplated, but in utter repugnance to the Spooner law. There was not a man in Congress or elsewhere who contemplated that the conditions of the Spooner law for the location of the canal at Panama, with the consent of Colombia, could be complied with by locating it there against the consent of Colombia.

It is an affront to common sense and a breach of faith so to pervert the Spooner law.

The accomplishment of his purpose would wait on nothing, and the President pushed it with force and arms until he had so involved his political party and the Senate and the country in it, until extreme embarrassment attended every possible effort to escape from the toils he had thrown around us.

I will refer to some of the leading steps taken during this two years' campaign of the President to show that the President has not dealt with the country in the open, bold, and courageous fashion for which he is applauded on the floor of the Senate by his political followers, and also by some others who, while denouncing his methods, and even his motives, follow his lead because it promises great gains, if successful, or else the destruction of any isthmian canal, through motives of revenge, should they dare to refuse to follow him or should presume to demand that the President, like other officials and citizens, shall be required to obey the law.

I will be brief in the enumeration of these facts, as they have been to some extent discussed in the general debate on the Hay-Varilla treaty.

I will state the facts that show the several steps taken by the President toward the completion of his purpose to locate and construct a canal at Panama in their chronological order, without discussing the reasons for their existence, none of which have been stated or explained by him or by anyone who has spoken for him.

We are left to draw our conclusions without the aid of any explanations.

The second Hepburn bill had been before the House of Representatives for several days, under a rule that required a final vote on the 13th of January, 1902. On that day it passed the House by a practically unanimous vote, and was sent to the Senate.

M. Edouard Lampré, secretary of the New Panama Canal Company, had been sent by it from Paris, and was en route to Washington when the following cable dispatch was sent to M. Bœufvé, who was a member of the French embassy at Washington:

PARIS, January 4, 1902—8.53 a. m.

BŒUFVÉ, Washington:

Inform Admiral Walker immediately, and without awaiting Lampré's arrival, that the company declares itself ready to transfer to the Government of the United States, on payment of $40,000,000, its properties and concessions, estimated at that amount by the Isthmian Canal Commission in its last report, page 103, in conformity with the terms and conditions of the estimates of said report.

BÔ,
President of the Board.

Other cablegrams followed, beginning with that to Admiral Walker on the 9th of January—the day of the passage of the Hepburn bill in the House, as follows:

PARIS, January 9, 1902—4.07 p. m.

Admiral WALKER,
President Isthmian Canal Commission,
Corcoran Building, Washington:

The New Panama Canal Company declares that it is ready to accept for the totality, without exception, of its property and rights on the Isthmus the amount of $40,000,000, the above offer to remain in force up to March 4, 1903.

BÔ,
President of the Board.

PARIS, January 11, 1902—4.17 p. m.

Admiral WALKER,
President Isthmian Canal Commission,
Corcoran Building, Washington:

Offer of sale of all our property applies also to all maps and archives in Paris.

BÔ,
President of the Board.

PARIS, January 14, 1902—9.45 p. m.

Admiral WALKER,
President Isthmian Canal Commission,
Corcoran Building, Washington:

We send by mail letter confirming cable 11th January, and, under registered package, judgment August 2, agreement with liquidator, and three extracts showing powers of board. All these documents are certified to by the United States consulate-general.

BÔ,
President of the Board.

The action of the President on that proposition is only known through the following statement of Admiral Walker, dated January 18, 1902:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1902.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: The Isthmian Canal Commission has the honor to submit the following report upon the proposition of the New Panama Canal Company to sell and dispose of all its rights, property, and unfinished work to the United States for $40,000,000.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the New Panama Canal Company held on the 21st of December last full power was given to the board of directors of the company to negotiate for the transfer of its property, concessions, and unfinished work to the United States, its action to be subject to formal ratification by the stockholders. In accordance with this action the board indicated its desire, through its representative in this city, to offer a proposition to make such transfer to the United States for the price mentioned.

Thereupon by your oral direction the president of the Commission conferred with Mr. Edouard Lampré, secretary-general of the New Panama Canal Company. He also received several cablegrams from Mr. Marius Bô, the newly chosen president of the company in Paris. The results of these conferences and communications have been considered at a meeting of the Commission called for that purpose

The first cablegram was dated in Paris on the 4th of January, and it stated that the company was ready to transfer to the United States its property and concessions for $40,000,000, and that the offer would remain open until the 4th of March, 1903. As it was not clear whether this offer included all the property of the company, further correspondence ensued, and it was made clear that the proposition was intended to cover the entire property of the company upon the Isthmus of Panama, all the stock of the Panama Railroad Company held for its use and benefit, and the maps, plans, archives, and records in Paris.

A communication and explanatory documents, duly certified, containing a fuller statement than is embraced in the cablegrams, but to the same effect, are on their way to the United States by mail, and copies of them have been deposited with the ambassador of the United States at Paris, who has acknowledged their receipt by cable to the Secretary of State.

This statement purports to be a report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, that was functus officio in November, 1901, when it made its final report to the President.

That paper professed to be the unanimous report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, but it omitted the dissent of Prof. Lewis M. Haupt, one of the commissioners, that was entered on the minutes, as follows:

> He [Professor Haupt] still believed that the Nicaragua route was the better of the two, but that the scope of the investigation had expanded beyond the mere question as to which route had the superior advantages, in view of the political situation and the great probability, if not certainty, of a divided report being used by the opponents of any canal to defeat legislation. It was a question, therefore, of Panama or nothing, and, as he believed firmly in the necessity of an isthmian waterway for the general good, he had concluded that his duty to his country would be best fulfilled by waiving his objections and signing the report, with the understanding that this statement of his reasons be entered upon the minutes.

The President's intervention in the preparation of the report is shown in the following extract:

Thereupon, by your oral direction, the president of the Commission conferred with M. Edouard Lampré, secretary-general of the New Panama Canal Company.

That company was thus taken into the confidence of the President in the settlement of a project for overturning the will of the people, expressed in the votes of their representatives in Congress, and he was the only person invited to the counsels of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The haste of this proceeding is shown by the following extract from that report:

He [Admiral Walker] also received several cablegrams from Mr. Marius Bô, the newly chosen president of the company, in Paris. The results of these conferences and communications have been considered at a meeting of the Commission called for that purpose.

The first cablegram was dated in Paris on the 4th of January, and it stated that the company was ready to transfer to the United States its property and concessions for $40,000,000, and that the offer would remain open until the 4th of March, 1903. As it was not clear whether this offer included all the property of the company, further correspondence ensued, and it was made clear that the proposition was intended to cover the entire property of the company upon the Isthmus of Panama, all the stock of the Panama Railroad Company held for its use and benefit, and the maps, plans, archives, and records in Paris.

A communication and explanatory documents, duly certified, containing a fuller statement than is embraced in the cablegrams, but to the same effect, are on their way to the United States by mail, and copies of them have been deposited with the ambassador of the United States in Paris, who has acknowledged their receipt by cable to the Secretary of State.

The report of the Commission was sent to Congress in a message of the President dated January 20, 1902.

The next act of the President is shown by the letter of the Secretary of State to Mr. Concha, minister from Colombia, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 21, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt at your hands of a communication dated the 31st of March, 1902, and another of the 18th of April, inclosing a proposal of the Republic of Colombia for a concessionary convention or treaty between the Republic of Colombia and that of the United States of America respecting the completion, maintenance, operation, control, and protection of an interoceanic canal over the Isthmus of Panama.

I am directed by the President to inform you that I shall be ready to sign with you the proposed convention as soon as—

First. The Congress of the United States shall have authorized the President to enter into such an agreement; and Second. As soon as the law officers of this Government shall have decided upon the question of the title which the New Panama Canal Company is able to give to all the properties and rights claimed by it and pertaining to a canal across the Isthmus and covered by the pending proposal.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

JOHN HAY.

Señor Don JOSÉ VICENTE CONCHA, etc.

In the papers accompanying this letter is the letter from Cromwell, acting as general counsel for the New Panama Canal Company, to the Secretary of State, which Mr. Concha styles "an expository communication," approved by him. It is a strange sandwich in diplomatic correspondence, but it sets forth the New Panama Canal Company, not as an intruder or intervenor in our highest and most important relations with Colombia, but as a recognized negotiator and as the next friend of Colombia.

The part of the "expository communication" that places the canal company in the lead and control of the national high contracting powers and makes their treaty engagements to depend on the consent of that company for their operative force is thus stated in article 1 of the concluded negotiation:

ARTICLE I.

The Government of Colombia authorizes the New Panama Canal Company to sell and transfer to the United States its rights, privileges, properties, and concessions, as well as the Panama Railroad and all the shares or part of the shares of that company, with the exception of the public lands situated outside of the zone hereinafter specified now corresponding to the concessions to both said enterprises, which public lands shall revert to the Republic of Colombia.

But it is understood that Colombia reserves all its rights to the special shares in the capital of the New Panama Canal Company, to which reference is made in Article IV of the contract of December 10, 1890, which shares shall be paid their full nominal value at least.

The railroad company (and the United States as owner of the enterprise) shall be free from the obligations imposed by the railroad concession, excepting as to the payment at maturity by the railroad company of the outstanding bonds issued by said railroad company.

I will read Mr. Cromwell's "expository communication" as proof of the President's knowledge of all the fair promises, pledges, and prognostications of Cromwell and Concha, and of himself as well, as to the outcome of the joint work of Cromwell, representing the canal company and Colombia as a chosen medium of honest fraternity, and of Concha, as the accredited minister of Colombia, and of Hay, the instructed Secretary of the President.

It will remind us of "the happy days we went gypsying" with Colombia, and it is a pleasant preface to the later days when the President went to war for Marroquin, against the Liberals, to keep him on his legs until he could negotiate the Hay-Herran treaty and procure its ratification.

The ornate glorification of the "expository" over his victim, the Nicaragua route, is the only point he had gained until a new opportunity for professional success was found in the treaty before the Senate, when he betrayed his noble and beloved Colombia and ran off with Panama, her truant daughter.

Hear Cromwell on Colombia:

[The New Willard, Washington, D. C., Sullivan & Cromwell, 49 and 51 Wall street.]

NEW YORK, March 31, 1902.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In connection with the presentation by Señor José Vicente Concha, minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary from the Republic of Colombia, of a proposed concessionary convention or treaty between the United States and Colombia to further the completion, operation, control, and protection of the Panama Canal by the United States, I have been requested by the minister, in view of my relation to the subject as general counsel of the Panama Canal Company, and of my knowledge of the minister's views derived from our daily conferences in the preparation of the treaty, to submit the following reflections:

Colombia welcomes the United States to its territory, and will facilitate in every way reasonable within its power the consummation of the desires and needs of the United States for the completion, operation, maintenance, control, and protection of the interoceanic canal across its domain, subject, of course, to the sovereignty of Colombia, and a reasonable and just convention between the two nations.

Colombia views with admiration, as does the rest of the world, the splendid magnanimity, the far-seeing statesmanship, the virile and comprehensive policy which moves this people to construct the greatest undertaking which has ever engaged the attention of mankind, not for its own benefit alone, nor with selfish preference to its own commerce, but for the common benefit upon equal terms and under universal neutrality in times of peace for all the peoples of the earth.

History does not furnish another instance of such national generosity, patriotism, and wisdom.

This could not but call out from Colombia the warmest response; and that nation takes pride in associating herself with an affair conducted upon such an elevated plane of national and international duty and concern.

The Isthmian Canal Commission, a most distinguished and able body, selected with such care by President McKinley to consider all possible isthmian canal routes and to determine which of them it is most to the interest of the United States to acquire, has reported unanimously that the Panama route is the most practicable and feasible route for an isthmian canal to be under the control, management, and ownership of the United States. Therefore the solution of the problem only involves two other conditions:

1. The sale by the New Panama Canal Company to the United States of the concession, property, and rights of the canal, with the shares of the Panama Railroad Company, and,

2. A new concessionary convention or treaty with Colombia.

The first of these two conditions already has been made easy of fulfillment in the formal acceptance by the New Panama Canal Company of the valuation fixed by the Isthmian Canal Commission—$40,000,000—and by its duly authorized proposal to the United States for a sale of the property at that price, subject, of course, to a satisfactory convention being arrived at between the United States and Colombia.

The sole remaining condition, then, is the determination of the concessionary and treaty relations of the United States to a zone of territory across the Isthmus of Panama necessary for the consummation of the undertaking.

There has not been a moment in which Colombia has not entertained the keenest desire to further the design of the United States, and this sentiment has prevailed under each succeeding administration in Colombia and alike in both of the great national parties who alternately have ruled in that country.

This sentiment is neither newborn nor inspired by hope of pecuniary gain. The two nations are old friends, and this feeling assumed practical form in 1846, when the treaty of that year was made, which expressly provided for the construction of this canal, in furtherance of which Colombia guaranteed to the United States the free transit of the Isthmus and granted extraordinary concessions to the people and commerce of the United States upon terms of perfect equality with its own citizens, while the United States, in turn, guaranteed the neutrality of the Isthmus and of the canal to be constructed upon it, as well as the sovereignty of Colombia over that territory.

It is a significant fact that this treaty of 1846-1848, assuring to the United States special rights and privileges upon the Isthmus of Panama in connection with any interoceanic canal or railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, antedates the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. The treaty of 1846-1848 is in full force, as it has continued to be without change from the date of its execution.

Colombia has never made a treaty with any other nation upon the subject of an isthmian canal, although it was at liberty to do so.

These treaty ties cemented their joint designs for the construction of a new highway for the world and have held the two nations together in common interests and unbroken friendship for more than a half century.

By granting the concessions now owned by the New Panama Canal Company and by furthering the construction of the canal to its present advanced stage of completion by the old and new Panama Canal companies, Colombia initiated the great work which now, happily, the United States may consummate.

While the minister of Colombia was in Washington for more than a year waiting for the moment when the subject could be seriously and attentively discussed, it is only since January 4, 1902, that anything could be definitely said or done, since then, and then only, was a definite proposal of sale made by the canal company. Immediately thereupon, however, the Government of Colombia, requiring the services of its then minister in other important fields, designated its minister of war, Señor Concha, as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary, to come at once from Bogota to Washington, charged with its ripest views and amplest instructions, to confer with the executive authorities of the United States, and, after exchange of information and opinions, to reach a satisfactory convention.

Minister Concha has devoted himself, since his arrival a few weeks ago, absorbingly to this task, and is prepared to reach a conclusion with the executive officers of the Government.

He is fully empowered to negotiate and sign a treaty, subject only to the ratification of the Colombian Congress, as in like cases with all nations.

But Colombia is in the dark as to the precise desires and needs of the United States upon the subject, and Minister Concha can not, of course, anticipate in his first statement all the reasonable requirements of this Government.

He wishes, however, to manifest in the most hearty manner the desire of his Government to facilitate the purposes of the United States, and this disposition is manifested by the comprehensive convention which he has this day submitted to you, but not as an ultimatum.

The establishment of a canal convention involves, as you are so well aware, besides the utilization of a canal zone for the construction, operation, maintenance, control, and protection of a canal, railroad, and auxiliary works, as well as a grant renewable perpetually and a consent to the sale by the New Panama Canal Company (all of which Colombia concedes in the convention submitted), but also numerous other grave questions relating to judicial procedure, punishment of crimes, the capture of criminals, sanitary and police regulations of Panama and Colon, proper regard to the vested interests upon the Isthmus, exemption of the United States from all forms of taxes, port charges, or other dues, etc.

Quite aside from pecuniary matters, these are subjects which only can be examined and negotiated directly with you in person, and are impossible of negotiation with the Houses of Congress.

Permit me to call attention to the facts that a canal convention in respect of the Isthmus of Panama necessarily involves considerations which do not relate to a section where there is but a wilderness, uninhabited by man and producing no income to the nation.

The convention respecting the Panama route covers a zone which has been the pathway of commerce across the continent for four hundred years, with important cities at its termini, with villages along the route, with a settled population, with considerable property, and with important vested interests, are to be taken into consideration.

All this represents an increment of value in civilizing influences, in means of protection, in expenditures of national funds for improvement and development, as well as in certitude of engineering plans, of all which the United States now may derive the benefit.

It would be neither in order nor fitting for the canal company or myself to express any views, one way or the other, upon any of the provisions of the proposed treaty, and our reserve in that regard will be noted. However, I beg to refer, by special request of the minister, to Article XXV of his proposed treaty, and which article relates to the pecuniary terms.

Colombia is prepared to discuss, negotiate, and decide upon the precise sum or sums which may be reasonable for the United States to pay and for Colombia to ask, but as the subject is in the hands of Congress, and it seems impracticable at the moment to secure a definite expression of the views of the United States upon the subject, Colombia manifests its good faith and reasonableness by proposing that the annuity shall be only such sum as mutually may be agreed upon between the nations, or, failing in such agreement, such fair and reasonable amount as may be determined by a high commission presided over by the president of the International Peace Tribunal of The Hague, the remaining members being nominated in equal number by the two nations.

Such annuity would only be fixed once in a hundred years. The national requirements of Colombia make a payment of $7,000,000 desirable, and you will note the provisions on that head; but I also ask you to note that Colombia waives the annuity for the first fourteen years. This method insures to the United States the concessionary rights which it requires and which can not be affected or interrupted by any difference or delay respecting the ascertainment of the annuity.

The United States is only required to pay such sum as it may agree upon or as so may be determined to be fair and reasonable. Colombia does not ask more than what may be determined to be fair and reasonable, and surely the United States does not wish to do less than that.

I have the honor to be, Mr. Secretary, your obedient servant,

WM. NELSON CROMWELL,
General Counsel New Panama Canal Company.

This must be delightful reading to the President.

In the letter of May 15, 1903, that inclosed the papers I have just commented upon, Mr. Hay inclosed a negotiation with Nicaragua and made a statement as to a negotiation with Costa Rica for canal concessions that followed and completed the McKinley agreements of 1900.

The Senate is fully informed by a letter of Mr. Hay in its possession that the negotiations with Costa Rica and Nicaragua were perfectly satisfactory to the Government.

The chief point of comparison between these negotiations of Costa Rica and Nicaragua and the Hay-Concha agreement is that the cost of the concessions was the same between the competing routes. Colombia agreed to sell her concessions for $7,000,000, and Nicaragua agreed to sell hers for $6,000,000, and Costa Rica agreed to sell hers for $1,000,000, making the cost the same on both routes for the concessions.

This official information, coming from the President, settled all inquiry and suggestion as to any desire of his for the Panama route that would cause him to agree to add $3,000,000 to the sum in favor of Colombia in the Hay-Herran treaty. These facts were presented to Congress as a solemn assurance that Colombia was bound to accept $7,000,000 in payment for her concessions.

The Spooner bill passed, on the report of the committee of conference, without any suggestion or suspicion of the addition of $3,000,000 to the price that the President had informed Congress that Colombia had agreed to take for her concessions.

I can state, in my place, that the Spooner law could not have been enacted if that $3,000,000 had been added to the price to be paid Colombia for her concessions. Without some explanation, this concession of the President to Colombia in the Hay-Herran treaty is only attributable to his fixed purpose to have the canal located at Panama, cost what it might in money or in war, or in disobedience of law.

Thus early in this programme of compulsion this fatal determination is disclosed, which, in its financial features and in its subordination to the New Panama Canal Company, backed by France, is repeated in article 22 of the treaty now before the Senate.

I will further establish the desperate nature of this purpose by showing the difference in the conduct of the President in Marroquin's war with the Liberals in Panama in 1901 and 1902, when he aided Marroquin to defeat them, and in the present war with Marroquin in Panama, in which he is aiding the Liberals to dismember Colombia. In both cases the canal at Panama was the real object of his intervention with the armed forces of the United States.

In 1902 he intervened to sustain Marroquin, to enable and to induce him to negotiate the Hay-Herran treaty and to secure its ratification. In the war of 1903–4 in Panama the President assisted the Liberals to destroy Marroquin's power and that of his Government because the Congress of Colombia refused to ratify the Hay-Herran treaty.

I will not further discuss the action of the President in respect of the military situation in Panama as it is at this time. That matter has been fully discussed upon facts, all of which are not as yet known to the country.

Every day, however, new statements are made by the incautious and supercilious persons who were concerned in creating our strange attitude in Panama that bring dissatisfaction to the country. In the coming campaign for the Presidency an inviting field will be opened to the spellbinders on both sides that I heartily wish could be occupied by the truth, established by undeniable records.

It is the truth and the holy character of simple justice that requires me to resort to the records to sustain the statements I have just made as to the attitude of the President in these two wars in Panama, and to show that it is and has been his fixed determination to locate and construct a canal at Panama that has controlled his action, first, for Marroquin and his position as President of Colombia, and then against him and the integrity of the Republic of Colombia.

His change of attitude is separated only by the lapse of a single year—from November, 1902, to November, 1903.

In 1898, late in the year, an outbreak of civil war occurred in Colombia as the immediate result of the rejection by the Congress of Colombia of a bargain with the New Panama Canal Company for an extension of the the Wyse canal concession of 1878 from the 31st of October, 1904, until the 31st of October, 1910.

I need not go over the facts I have so often shown, that no one has controverted, to establish the truth of the proposition that the rejection of this offer, with its inducement of $1,000,000 French gold, was the immediate cause of the outbreak of revolt in many departments of Colombia. I respectfully challenge any Senator to show any other cause for that war. And, if that was the cause of it, I may with equal confidence warn any honest man against its approval by his vote in the Senate on the ratification of this treaty.

It was, of course, expected that the tide of war would reach Panama, and to provide against interference with our treaty obligations to protect the transit across the Isthmus it was our duty to stand ready to afford that protection.

As early as January, 1900, President McKinley had the Scorpion at Cartagena, Colombia, on the lookout for the advent of the war in Panama. The first report was from Lieutenant-Commander Sargent, on the 17th of January, which I will read:

U. S. S. SCORPION,
Cartagena, Republic of Colombia, January 17, 1900.

SIR: 1. I have the honor to report that the first news of any importance for many weeks concerning the revolution in Colombia has been promulgated officially to-day. It was received in the shape of a telegram from the governor of this Department at Barranquilla, repeating another received by him from General Cassabianca at Bucaramanga under the date of January 4.

2. In this telegram the governor confirms the rumors of a decisive victory over the revolutionary forces of General Uribe-Uribe at Bucaramanga, which is situated in the mountains of the central part of the Department of Santander, about 450 miles from Cartagena, near the source of the Lebrija River, a branch of the Magdalena. He also reports that General Lujan has completely routed the revolutionists under Vargas Santos, near Cerrito, Department of Antioquia; that Cucuta, in the northeast part of Santander, having been evacuated by the rebels, was to be occupied on the 4th by 2,000 men under the command of General Dominguez, and that all guerrillas on the river Magdalena had disappeared.

On January 4, also, a force of 3,000 men, under General Velez, moved toward Bogota for the purpose of pacifying that portion of the country and to open communication with the capital.

3. This news, presumably reliable, tends to show that the Government forces have been successful. Meantime, however, the country is more or less demoralized and in a lawless condition. Government adherents and revolutionists murder each other when convenient, forced loans go on, Government vessels cruise along the coast burning villages and impressing men, committing outrages of every description, and all business is paralyzed.

The authorities are very hard up for money, as their principal reliance, the revenue from customs, is materially reduced on account of the general stagnation of all commercial transactions.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

N. SARGENT,
Lieutenant-Commander, U. S. Navy, Commanding.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

After that reports dated June 6, 7, and 10 show that there was no disturbance of the transit at Panama, though several fights had occurred between the opposing forces.

On September 15, 23, and 30 the same accounts of peaceful conditions at Panama are given as to conditions at Colon and Panama by our commanding officers.

On October 1, 1901, Commander McCrea reports as follows:

U. S. S. MACHIAS,
Colon, Colombia, October 1, 1901.

SIR: I have to report the result of my efforts to get at the existing political situation here in Colon along the railway and northern coast, and regret only that more definite news can not be obtained.

2. I find that there is a strong undercurrent of discontent, which is growing desperate and resentful among the poorer classes. Times are hard, and the Government is blamed by all the citizens. Prominent or declared Liberals are punished by imprisonment. As evidence of this, the prisons are kept full both here and in Panama.

3. Rumors of the scouting by the Government troops near Panama are confirmed by the railroad officials, but they do not complain of the least interference in the traffic. The trains are running on time, but the armed guards are increased in number, amounting now to twenty men on each passenger train.

4. The steamer Sunrise reports all quiet at Boca del Toro, also that the naphtha launch "borrowed" from the United States consular agent by the insurgent troops was returned to him in accordance with the promise to Lieutenant-Commander Sargent, without thanks or apology, also without damage.

5. The health conditions continue unsatisfactory, but I am pleased to report the health of this ship's company as being excellent. Smallpox and fever of the pernicious variety prevail in the city, so I have taken all precautions to avoid them by moving well out into the harbor and restricting liberty.

6. The commander of the Suchet has requested orders north on account of his increasing sick list.

7. Altogether, there is little of value to report, either of alarming or pacifying nature.

8. We are making a survey of the waters and land surrounding this anchorage, a report of which will be sent, when completed, through Captain Perry of the Iowa, to the Department.

Very respectfully,

HENRY MCCREA,
Lieut. Commander, United States Navy, Commanding.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

On October 7 Captain Perry reports as follows:

No. 1589.]

U. S. S. IOWA,
Panama, Colombia, October 7, 1901.

SIR: Since my last report another week has passed without any military or political change on the Isthmus proper, the same condition of peace and quiet existing in Panama and Colon and along the line of the Panama Railroad as has prevailed for more than a year.

And Captain McCrea reports as follows, on October 12:

U. S. S. MACHIAS,
Colon, Colombia, October 12, 1901.

SIR: 1. There are no material changes in the condition of affairs here in Colon, though one hears of "wars and rumors of war" at various points all over the Republic of Colombia.

2. From reliable sources I learn that the Liberal leader, Diaz, feeling much encouraged over the reported successes of his party at Bocas del Toro and the well-known discontent existing among the Government troops on the Isthmus, due to their having received no pay for five weeks, has issued a proclamation calling upon all loyal Colombians to join him near Panama, where he has plenty of arms and ammunition for everybody.

Diaz has also invited General Alban to meet him outside the city limits, the only known reply being that General Alban is building stone barricades on the outskirts of Panama toward La Boca.

All this in Panama; Colon has not even this much to break the monotony, everything being most peaceful, and the normal traffic of peace goes on without interruption.

3. I am pleased to report that we have no sick and that the shore doctor says smallpox has disappeared from Colon entirely. Of course I shall continue to take every precaution to maintain the good health of the crew, and to that end have ordered the coal delivered alongside in lighters, which makes it cost about 10 cents more per ton.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY MCCREA,
Lieutenant-Commander, United States Navy, Commanding.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

These reports continue in the same peaceful tenor until November 20, when the insurgents took possession of Colon without fighting. They remained until November 29, when they surrendered to United States forces, laid down their arms, and were paroled.

On April 28, 1902, Captain Reisinger said:

3. The situation here now would seem to indicate that there is not much probability of any serious conflict between the two parties in the near future. The governmental forces on the Isthmus, mainly at Panama, so greatly outnumber the Liberal forces in the vicinity that it would seem to justify the opinion expressed above.

The consul-general at Panama has expressed himself most decidedly against the possibility of trouble for several months. As I have before stated, I think more is to be feared from the troops that are massed here in case they are not paid. The only cause of anxiety on the Panama side seems to be the Padilla and several other small gunboats in possession of the insurgents in these waters.

On September 10 Commander Potter telegraphs the Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

PANAMA, September 10, 1902.

SECRETARY NAVY, Washington:

Two thousand men surrendered to revolutionists at Agua Dulce, Colombia. Revolutionists reported advancing near Panama, Colombia.

POTTER.

What I have quoted from the report of the Secretary of the Navy shows that the presence of the belligerent armies in Panama had not materially delayed the transit on the Isthmus, and that Colombia had not been prevented from the use of the railroad for military purposes until actual fighting on the line of the road had occurred, and then the prohibition of the use of the road was the same to both parties until the battle of Agua Dulce resulted in the very important victory for the Liberals on the 30th of August, 1902.

The danger of the overthrow of Marroquin in Panama by this great victory suddenly changed the attitude of the President toward the belligerents, and he gave to Marroquin every advantage over Herrera.

To establish this and to prove the fact that it was to secure the negotiation and ratification of the Hay-Herran treaty, as the particular purpose of the active interference of the President in support of Marroquin, I will now make further quotations from the report of the Secretary of the Navy.

When the civil war reached Panama, Marroquin was guarding the isthmian transit and using it to send troops and munitions of war back and forth on the Panama Railroad.

Since January, 1900, the United States had war vessels on both coasts of the Isthmus looking after the interests of her citizens, but had no occasion to protect the transit until November 21, 1901, when the governor of Panama sent the following note to our consul-general at Panama, which, with the replies thereto, I now read:

PANAMA, November 21, 1901.

CONSUL-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES:

Yesterday, while I acquainted his honor, the civil and military chief of the Department, of the facts you gave me notice of in your esteemed letter of even date, reaggravated by the capture of Colon by the rebels that menace the line, I informed our minister at Washington as follows:

"Colon is being stormed. Scanty forces here. You must settle traffic affair. Answer."

The object of the above is to demand of the American Government to comply with the engagements contracted by said Government with ours in conformity with article 35 of the treaty of 1848, until our Government gets through with its operations of pacification and can devote its action to the security of the international traffic.

I am so far without any answer either from our minister at Washington or from the civil and military chief; but it being impossible, for the moment, to the Government to take such measures as are needed to assure effectually the free transit across the Isthmus on account of the larger portion of our available forces being operated against the rebels in other places, it is my opinion that the moment has arrived for the United States to comply with the obligation contracted as per the text of the final part of the above-referred treaty of 1846.

With sentiments of the highest consideration, I have the honor to be, Mr. Consul-General,

Your most obedient servant,

ARISTIDES ARJONA.

CONSULAR SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Panama, November 21, 1901.

To His Excellency the GOVERNOR, Panama.

SIR: In response to your communication of this date, I beg to say that I understand you as saying, first, that the Colombian Government is unable to give adequate protection to the Panama Railroad Company, its property, and the transit of the Isthmus between Panama and Colon.

Second, that you desire the United States Government to afford this protection, under the thirty-fifth section of the treaty of 1846 between Colombia and the United States Government.

A copy of your letter has been furnished Capt. Thomas Perry, commander of the battle ship Iowa, for such consideration as he may deem necessary, and I have cabled the contents to Washington.

I may be permitted to say that recent instructions indicate an indisposition on the part of the United States to land troops unless the same becomes essentially necessary. Such action is of such serious character that it is to be hoped that it may be avoided.

At this time all is quiet along the line, the trains are moving unmolested, and telegraphic communication has been fully established. So that at this moment there does not seem to exist necessity for such an extraordinary move on the part of the United States.

I may say, however, that in the event of a repetition of the unlawful acts such as were committed last Monday and Tuesday, the United States will land a sufficient force to effectually protect the transit of the Isthmus.

Inclosed find copy of letter from Captain Perry.

With best wishes, I am, sir,

Very respectfully,

H. A. GUDGER,
United States Consul-General.

U. S. S. IOWA,
Panama, Colombia, November 21, 1901.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date inclosing a communication from Acting Governor Aristides Arjona in which he states that it is "impossible for the moment for the Government (Panama) to take such measures as are needed to assure effectually the free transit across the Isthmus * * * it is my (his) opinion that the moment has arrived for the United States to comply with the obligation contracted as per the text of the final part of the treaty of 1846."

2. In reply I desire to state that it is my opinion that the obligation on the part of the United States arises after the Colombian Government has exhausted its means to maintain the transit and to prevent interference therewith. As the Colombian Government has made no effort to do these things it can not be said that the obligation is upon the United States. However, this is a point that I shall leave to be discussed by the diplomatic representatives of the two Governments.

3. In its weakness, at a time when the transit is open and in full operation, the acting governor states that his Government is unable to perform its obligation. This without having made any efforts to do so. I will therefore, just as soon as there is any interference with the free transit of the Isthmus, occupy the line with forces under my command and supervise it.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS PERRY,
Captain, United States Navy, Commanding.

The UNITED STATES CONSUL-GENERAL,
Panama, Colombia.

This affair soon passed off, and our troops were not used afterwards to protect the transit until after the defeat of Marroquin at Agua Dulce, after a protracted siege, in the last days of August, 1902.

On the 20th of November, 1901, Secretary of the Navy Long sent the following dispatch to Captain Perry:

WASHINGTON, November 20, 1901.

PERRY, Iowa, Panama:

Notify all persons, including leader insurgents, interference with transit must immediately cease, otherwise you will land force and maintain free transit and telegraphic communication.

Consult with Gudger.

LONG.

On November 21 and 22, 1901, Captain Perry sent the following dispatches to the Secretary of the Navy:

PANAMA, November 21, 1901.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington:

Everything quiet. No further interference since notification. Transit and telegraphic communication open. Shall land force if there should be further interference. Colon in possession of Liberals, and quiet.

PERRY.

PANAMA, November 21, 1901.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington:

Since previous dispatch acting governor notifies consul of his inability to protect transit, and calls upon United States to protect it. As transit is open and normal, and company asks no protection, I see no necessity to land force until further interference, as directed in your dispatch of yesterday.

PERRY.

PANAMA, November 22, 1901.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington:

Situation quite satisfactory to us. Liberals along line inclined to protect rather than interfere. All trains moving. Alban returned and left again for Chorrerra. Expressed satisfaction that United States did not find it necessary to land force. Said he was better able to protect now, having more troops in Panama. I have instructed McCrea to reembark detachment when he deems it no longer necessary to protect company's property at Colon, and not to sail without my authority.

PERRY.

In the early months of 1902 the forces of the Liberals were recruited in the Department of Panama, and Marroquin held Colon and Panama and other places, including Agua Dulce, and increased his forces by sending considerable bodies from Cartagena. None of these were excluded from passing over the Panama Railroad.

Several battles occurred at different places, distant from the railroad, with varying success to the respective belligerents.

Herrera received consignments of arms and ammunition, via Nicaragua, at places on the Bay of Panama, and began to concentrate for an assault on Marroquin's forces at Agua Dulce, and skirmishes occurred in that quarter between detached forces, with decided success to the Liberals under Herrera.

The siege of Agua Dulce by Herrera occupied the month of August and a considerable part of July.

Such information as to its progress as came to our naval officers was sent by cable to the Secretary of the Navy.

On June 16, 1902, Captain Reisinger informed the Secretary of the Navy that the Colombian Government had withdrawn its guards from the protection of the railroad, and on the 23d of June an expedition of Government troops had gone northward and had landed at Antone, about 50 miles west of Panama, and would move toward David and Agua Dulce.

On August 4 Captain Potter informed the Secretary of the Navy that—

It is reported that fighting has been in progress at Agua Dulce for two days and there is great anxiety as to the result.

On the 11th of August Captain Potter reports:

Nothing is known as to the heavy fighting reported at Agua Dulce on the 29th and 30th ultimo, and again on the 2d instant. Should insurgents gain a decisive victory the situation would be critical.

On the 18th of August Captain Potter informs the Government that—

No reliable information has been received in regard to the result of the operations at Agua Dulce. It is believed that the Government forces are surrounded and can not hold out much longer.

3. The authorities are very apprehensive of an attack on Panama and have very few troops to defend the place, and have no means of bringing more from other points.

PANAMA, August 21, 1902.

SECRETARY OF NAVY, Washington:

Boyaca, with 800 men, was captured by revolutionists on July 30.

POTTER.

On September 1, 1902, Commander Potter informs the Secretary of the Navy that—

3. The Government is receiving some reenforcements by way of Colon and is strengthening defenses at Panama.

On the 3d of September, 1902, Commander Potter states, in a dispatch to the Secretary of the Navy:

The Government conceded that 2,000 men surrendered to the revolutionists at Agua Dulce on the 30th of August.

2. The revolutionists are reported to be advancing on Panama.

As soon as information unfavorable to the Government of Colombia reached Washington, the following dispatches were sent out to our war vessels:

PANAMA, September 1, 1902.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, D. C.:

Cipher message this morning revolutionists near railroad line; situation serious; transit across Isthmus still open.

MOODY.

The effect of the surrender at Agua Dulce was to cause our Government to send its war ships to Colon and Panama under the hurry orders I have just quoted. The object was to protect the transit, which was in no danger from the forces of the revolutionists under Herrera, but beyond question to save the Government of Marroquin, then about to receive a fatal blow, the real inducement being to save the then incomplete negotiation of the Hay-Herran treaty and its final ratification by a Congress to be chosen in Colombia.

The following correspondence leaves no doubt on the subject:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 13, 1902.

SIR: The Department incloses herewith a copy of a letter from the Secretary of State in reference to the question of using your good offices to restore peace on the Isthmus of Panama.

The Department desires you to act in accordance with the provisions of this letter until the arrival of the Wisconsin, with Admiral Casey on board, at Panama, when you will please inform the Admiral as to the existing conditions, that he may continue the effort to establish peace.

Very respectfully,

W. H. MOODY, Secretary.

THE COMMANDING OFFICER,
U. S. S. Cincinnati.

Then the canal negotiation comes into view as the inducement for our military intervention, at the request of Marroquin, and it never ceases to appear or to be overlooked by our President until the Liberal army is placed hors de combat and Marroquin is secure in his office of President of Colombia. They worked together for the treaty by destroying the victorious army of Herrera.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 16, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to submit to you confidentially the question of exerting good offices to restore peace on the Isthmus of Panama, as propounded in the following telegram from the United States minister to Colombia:

BOGOTA, September 11, 1902.

SECRETARY OF STATE, Washington:

Minister for foreign affairs desires me to inform you that his Government would appreciate your good offices to bring about peace in the country, especially on the Isthmus, where the revolution is strong. This Government has no new terms to offer, but thinks your good offices may avail to induce revolutionists to accept terms heretofore offered, and thus prevent otherwise inevitable heavy loss of life. Minister for foreign affairs added: "Not only is the question of humanity involved, but so long as the war lasts Congress will not be convened, and therefore the continuance of war will delay submission of the canal matter to the Congress."

Minister for foreign affairs emphasized this last point as being well to present to your consideration.

HART.

Upon the receipt of this telegram I communicated with the President, saying to him that in view of the urgency of the situation on the Isthmus, the isolation of the United States legation at Bogota, which seemed to make communication by the minister dilatory, if not impractical, and the absence from Panama on leave of the consul-general, Mr. Gudger, it might be proper to consider whether the commander of the U. S. S. Cincinnati, now at Colon, should be advised of this request of the minister for foreign affairs of Colombia and instructed to use his good offices in the suggested sense.

I have received from the President a telegram approving of my suggestion as to intrusting such a mission to the commander of the Cincinnati.

The precedents in which our naval commanders have lent their good offices to bring about peace in Central America during the past years will serve to guide Commander McLean in the execution of such instruction as you may deem proper to give him in this regard.

The cooperation of the United States consul at Colon will be cheerfully given to Commander McLean, and I shall be pleased to telegraph to the consul in that sense if you desire.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

ALVEY A. ADEE, Acting Secretary.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

U. S. S. CINCINNATI,
Colon, Colombia, September 20, 1902.

SIR: I acknowledge the receipt this date of the following cablegram:

CINCINNATI, Colon:

United States guarantee perfect neutrality of Isthmus and that a free transit from sea to sea be not interrupted or embarrassed. United States of Colombia guarantee right of way or transit across Isthmus open and free to Government and citizens of United States and their property.

Any transportation of troops which might contravene these propositions of the treaty should not be sanctioned by you, nor use of road be permitted which might convert the line of transit into theater of hostility. Transportation of Government troops not in violation of treaty, and which will not endanger transit or provoke hostilities, may not be objectionable. The Department must rely on your judgment to decide such questions, as the conditions may change from day to day. Consult Department freely when in doubt.

MOODY.

Very repectfully,

T. C. McLEAN.

That the way was carefully opened to Marroquin to save himself and his Government from the loss of the Department of Panama to the Liberals, under Herrera, by the action of the President is, if possible, still more clearly shown in the following dispatches, which give the full right of way to Marroquin to handle his forces and munitions of war over the Panama Railroad:

Mr. Hart to Mr. Hay.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Bogota, October 6, 1902.

The President invited me to a conference this afternoon for the purpose of showing me a telegram in which governor of Panama complains that the American admiral forbids the passage of Colombian troops and munitions of war over railroad.

The President desires me to impress upon you that unless railroad company be allowed to comply with article 19 of contract with Colombian Government it will be impossible to deal successfully with the revolution in the Department of Panama, and asks that you instruct American commander to permit railroad company to comply with contract.

HART.

The Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of State.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 6, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to quote below, for your information, the translation of a cipher telegram received to-day from Rear-Admiral Casey, at Panama, Colombia:

PANAMA, October 5, 1902.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington:

Governor Salazar returned my call yesterday and strongly protested against any restriction of Colombian Government use of road as an invasion of sovereign and treaty rights, and requested transportation of consignment arms and ammunition, Colon to Panama, received by steamer and loaded on cars before my order prohibiting such transportation.

I have received a letter from General Herrera, insurgent, protesting against transportation troops and all contraband of war. Claims rights of belligerents, saying that he may be compelled to enforce them, and after October 22 threatens to disturb free and uninterrupted transit if Colombian Government allowed to transport contraband of war. Can Herrera dictate to us? Ammunition can be transported safely by occupying road; if so, however, another battalion marines necessary. Situation otherwise unchanged. No uneasiness whatever.

CASEY.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. MOODY, Secretary.

Admiral Casey took command of all the forces at Panama and soon got into trouble with Marroquin's Government by his impartial effort to observe neutrality between the belligerents. His orders were in strict keeping with his duty under our laws and our treaty obligations, but that did not meet the requirements of the occasion.

Casey was allowed his discretion in doubtful cases under the following dispatch, but he did not know that the Hay-Herran negotiation was to control him in military operations in Panama:

[Translation.—Confidential.]

SEPTEMBER 20, 1902.

CINCINNATI, Colon (via Bermuda):

United States guarantee perfect neutrality of Isthmus and that a free transit from sea to sea be not interrupted or embarrassed. United States of Colombia guarantee right of way or transit across Isthmus open and free to Government and citizens of United States and their property.

Any transportation of troops which might contravene these provisions of treaty should not be sanctioned by you, nor should use of road be permitted which might convert the line of transit into theater of hostility. Transportation of Government troops not in violation of treaty and which will not endanger transit or provoke hostilities may not be objectionable. The Department must rely on your judgment to decide such questions, as the conditions may change from day to day. Consult the Department freely when in doubt.

MOODY.

Casey changed his regulations in obedience to orders, and Perdemo forced the victorious Liberals to the wall.

The following correspondence shows how these changes were understood at Panama:

PANAMA, October 11, 1902.

DEAR ADMIRAL: I am transmitting herewith a memorandum which I received from a reliable person who has just arrived on the German steamer in Colon.

Yours, very truly,

FELIX EHRMAN.

Rear-Admiral SILAS CASEY,
United States Flagship Wisconsin, Bay of Panama.

MEMORANDUM.

On board the German steamer arrived at Colon this morning from the Colombian ports came a reliable person, who gives the following information:

A battle was fought at the Cienega, Department of Magdalena, and the revolution under the command of Gen. Clodomiro Castillo was defeated.

Gen. Rafael Uribe Uribe did not wait in Tenerife, Department of Magdalena, for the Government forces operating on him, but retreated at their proximity.

Four thousand men from the Government are persecuting Castillo's disbanded people and Uribe's small army.

The interior of the Republic is quiet; the Magdalena River is now perfectly free.

Six thousand men from the Government army are coming down the river. General Perdomo is in Barranquilla and will sail for Colon on board of the Government gunboat Cartagena, with his staff.

[Clipped from the Panama Star and Herald, October 12, 1902.]

CASEY DIRECTED TO BE LESS STRICT.

WASHINGTON, October 10.

Acting on the mild protest received from the Colombian Government and to avoid any appearance of taking sides with the revolution on the Isthmus, Acting Secretary Darling, of the Navy, to-day directed Casey, at Panama, to use moderate methods as far as possible in preserving the transit on the Panama Railroad.

BOGOTA DISPLEASED AT HIS ORDERS.

Casey's recent order that no combatants be transported on the railroad caused great dissatisfaction at Bogota, and United States Minister Hart was informed that Colombia thought that Casey's order prevented Colombia's efforts to crush the revolution.

Secretaries Hay and Darling conferred with regard to the question this morning.

DECLINED FOR FEAR OF ENDANGERING TRANSIT.

The United States has several times declared its neutrality to the revolution. Casey's course of action has the sanction of the Department. He declined to transport the Government troops because he feared that their presence aboard the trains would provoke an attack by the revolutionists.

It was decided to-day that it would be better not to have the declination to transport Government troops stand as a rule, and Casey was so informed by a dispatch from the Navy Department. He was advised to transport the Colombian Government troops, unless he feels that to do so would convert the line of transit into a theater of hostilities.

The third, fifth, eleventh, and twelfth paragraphs of the report of Admiral Casey of October 20 show how we crushed Herrera for the purpose of sustaining Marroquin, as follows:

3. General Perdomo, of the Colombian Government, said to be clothed with ministerial powers, arrived at Colon on the 16th.

I had previously directed Commander Wilson, senior officer present there, to extend to the General, on arrival, transit across the Isthmus should he desire to visit Panama. The offer was accepted, and the General, with a numerous staff, came over in the afternoon, his train strongly guarded by a company of marines. On the afternoon of the 18th, accompanied by my personal staff and our vice-consul-general, Mr. Felix Ehrman, I called and was most cordially received by him.

5. A great deal of sickness prevails among the Colombian troops, especially at Colon, where the death rate is about from ten to twelve a day. It is less than at Panama. The disease seems to be mostly dysentery, with some yellow fever.

11. Judging from conditions now existing and from information I am able to obtain, there seems little prospect of a speedy termination of this strife. Panama and Colon are practically besieged; troops at neither place dare to go beyond their intrenchments.

I firmly believe if our men were removed from shore the insurgents would be in Panama in forty-eight hours. I think the Government, therefore, is very willing that they should remain, making occasional mild objections, which really it does not mean shall be taken seriously.

12. Great things were expected on Perdomo's arrival; but as he came attended only by numerous generals, of which there were apparently already a surfeit in the city, I fail to see how he can accomplish much.

On the return of the victorious Liberals from Agua Dulce fighting occurred on the railroad between Matachin and Colon.

As the trains would pass the battle was suspended. A party of Liberals occupied Colon without any disturbance of the people.

The French and American naval commanders agreed that they must be removed from Colon, and after conferring with General de la Rosa, their commander, and a display of force, he surrendered to General Alban, commanding Marroquin's forces.

This was the first party that surrendered under the policy adopted by our Government, and I will read Captain Perry's account of it:

14. Soon afterwards a meeting of the commanding naval officers who were to assume control of the city of Colon was held on board of the Marietta. A copy of the agreement is inclosed herewith.

15. It having been agreed that 300 men would be sufficient to control the city during the interim, I stated that the United States was prepared to supply that number. The French commander expressed a desire to land for the protection of the French concession in Colon a sufficient number for that purpose.

I offered to give him the number required from my command, but as he appeared insistent, stating that his Government would not be satisfied if anything should happen without his own men being there, I promptly yielded the point. A part of the agreement was that it was our opinion that the probable time that would be necessary for them to remain on shore would not extend beyond the morning of Saturday, November 30, 1901, being less than twenty-four hours.

16. General de la Rosa, having expressed a wish that he, with his brother, be excepted from the general indulgence offered by General Alban to the Liberal forces, we commanding officers signed a memorandum on that subject, a copy of which is herewith inclosed.

17. Thursday, November 28, the day of the surrender, passed quietly and peaceably, the terms being carried out as agreed upon, both at the conference and in accord with the arrangements made by the commanding officers.

A force of 150 men arrived from Panama at 10.45 a. m., under command of Lieutenant-Commander Peters, which, with about 150 from the Marietta and Machias, made a total United States force of about 300. At 11 o'clock a. m. this force was drawn up in front of the cuartel and opposite it, the Liberal forces about to surrender, numbering about 100, under the command of General de la Rosa, on the opposite side of the street. The commanding officers of foreign men-of-war, including H. B. M. S. Tribune and French cruiser Suchet, together with the consuls of the United States, England, and France, being present, General de la Rosa formally turned over the control of the city to the charge and control of the commanding officers.

The Liberal troops then deposited their arms and munitions of war, when the Liberal flag was hauled down. Much feeling was shown at this time by the whole Liberal command, a large majority of them being in tears. United States sentries were then posted at the cuartel and at all necessary places in the city excepting the French concession, and our battalion marched off for dinner and to be ready in case of need during the three hours interim.

On the 3d of November, 1902, General Herrera addressed the following note to Admiral Casey:

BOERI, November 3, 1903.

SIR: I wish to thank you very much for the interest you manifest in the well-being, the peace, and the tranquillity of Colombia, of which you have given undoubted proofs in your former actions and in the contents of your kind communication of October 28, which I have just received.

In a note dated to-day I express to Gen. Victor M. Salazar my wish to confer on the subject of peace on board the battle ship Wisconsin in accordance with the kind invitation you have extended us, and I am in hopes that he will make the necessary arrangements for my transport to Panama Bay.

With expressions of the highest consideration and respect,

I am, your obedient servant,

B. HERRERA.

SILAS CASEY,
Commander in Chief Pacific Station.

The victorious Liberal general was thus defeated by the landing of our marines to prevent an attack on Panama, in which Admiral Casey twice admitted in his dispatches that they would have been successful, and by his turning over the railroad to General Perdomo for the transportation of his troops between Colon and Panama their success was made possible.

Herrera's pathetic letter of November 2, 1902, in which he prefers "the peace and tranquillity of Colombia" to the success of his army is a reproach to the United States, the deep sting of which was not fully felt until the 3d of November, 1903.

We destroyed the Liberal army in Panama in November, 1902, to keep Marroquin in power until the Hay-Herran treaty could be ratified, and failing in that we destroyed Marroquin and Colombia on the 3d of November, 1903, for the purpose of getting a canal concession on the Isthmus.

The capitulation of Herrera was signed on the 21st of November, 1902, and the ratification of the Hay-Herran treaty was provided for in article 7.

This record, reported in messages of the President of the United States, fixes an indelible sentence of inconsistency and wrong upon the country that in both wars in Panama, the one of 1902 and the other in 1903, we took sides first with the Jesuits against the Liberals and then with the Liberals against the Jesuits, and that our change of attitude was alone due to the determination of our President that our great national work should be done at Panama and nowhere else, is a violation of the express mandate of the Spooner law.

If the use of our war resources in supporting Colombia, led by Marroquin, in November, 1902, was justifiable, there can be no justification in using them against Colombia, led by Marroquin, in November, 1903.

The surrender of Herrera was made under a capitulation with General Perdomo on the 21st of November, 1902, the seventh and eighth articles of which are as follows:

ARTICLE 7. In accordance with the desire of the Government and the nation, as soon as public order is restored an edict of convocation to elections will be issued, regarding the members for Congress, in respect to which the Government engages itself to use all its authority to effect it with purity and legality, as was promised by the vice-president in the response given to a memorial signed by various Liberals of Bogota the 14th of April the present year. To this Congress will be submitted for consideration the following questions of high national interests:

(a) The negotiations relating to the Panama Canal.

(b) The reforms presented to the Congress in 1898, by the vice-president of the Republic.

(c) The reformation of the monetary system of the country, in which paper money serves as a base, making the rentals to the Republic from contract on the canal inalienable.

ARTICLE 8. The recognition of the Government's authority by the members of the united armies of Cauca and Panama and by all forces or people that desire to receive this treaty.

In a report of November 3 by Admiral Casey to the Secretary of the Navy, he had inclosed the following account of the coming of General Perdomo to Panama and its connection with the canal negotiations:

[General news letter. (By mail.)]

THE ISTHMIAN SITUATION—GENERAL PERDOMO'S IMPORTANT MISSION—POWERFUL ARMY COMING THAT WILL CLEAR RAILROAD LINES OF GUERRILLA BANDS—AMERICAN FORCES CAN THEN BE RELIEVED FROM SHORE DUTY.

COLON, October 20, 1902.

New York, October 20, 1902. A dispatch dated Panama, October 17, gives the following account of the situation on the Isthmus:

General Perdomo yesterday notified the foreign consuls here that he had assumed the functions of supreme commander of the Colombian forces in the Isthmus.

General Perdomo has taken an active part in the military affairs of Colombia during the last thirty years, and this notwithstanding the fact that he is one of the richest land and cattle owners in the Departments of Tolima and Cundinamarca. In an interview this morning he said:

"With the exception of the Department of Panama, where General Herrera has his forces, and a few guerrilla bands in the Departments of Magdalena and Bolivar, the Republic is pacified. Traders travel through the country and are protected by the Government.

"I have been agreeably impressed with the American forces on the Isthmus. At Colon the American consul visited me and was very kind and amiable. The commanding officer of the American marines placed a guard of honor on the train which brought me across, and this guard was put under my orders. Acting Superintendent Prescott of the railroad offered me his private car for the trip.

"As a result of my observation with the American forces I have absolutely no fear that any difficulty will arise between Colombia and the American forces here or the railroad company. I think the landing of the United States marines has been effective in maintaining free transit over the Isthmus.

"I expect soon to have a powerful army here, and will then clear the railroad line of guerrilla bands, whose only object is to create complications between Colombia and the United States. I shall then be able to relieve the American forces doing shore duty on the Isthmus.

"I am a great friend of the United States, and I admire that country. I and all Colombians favor the construction of a canal by the Americans, and my principal object in pacifying the Isthmus is to make possible a meeting of the Colombian Congress to consider the canal bill. On the arrival here of our newly acquired cruiser Bogota, from San Francisco—and she is expected shortly—I will concentrate my forces in this Department and begin my campaign immediately. The Colombian Government can send $0,000 [misprint in newspaper] men here, but 10,000 men is all I require."

The eleventh paragraph of the report of Admiral Casey of October 13 to the Secretary of the Navy uncovers the whole situation, as follows:

11. I inclose a clipping from the Panama Star and Herald of October 12, 1902. In this connection I take occasion to inform the Department that I have refrained, as far as possible, from in any way embarrassing the officials of the Colombian Government, except so far as is absolutely necessary in my judgment to maintain uninterrupted and unembarrassed transit and to prevent the line of transit from being converted into a theater of hostilities.

I shall decide such questions as the conditions may change from day to day, and when in doubt will consult the Department. Further in this connection, I have to inform the Department that I have been unable to learn of any effort on the part of the Colombian Government to crush the revolution in this district just prior to or since my arrival at Panama.

On the other hand, it is my opinion that if it were not for the restraining influence of our naval force here Panama would fall an easy victim to the combined land forces and gunboats of the insurgents.

Very respectfully,

SILAS CASEY,
Rear-Admiral, U. S. Navy,
Commander in Chief, U. S. Naval Force, Pacific Station.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Admiral Casey proceeded to open negotiations for the capitulation of Herrera's army as soon as the further prosecution of the Liberal war with Marroquin was rendered impossible. He begun by sending Herrera the following note:

U. S. FLAGSHIP WISCONSIN,
Panama, Colombia, October 2, 1902.

SIR: 1. I have the honor to inform you that I have been authorized by my Government to offer my friendly services to the leaders of the contending parties in the Republic of Colombia, with a view to bringing about a friendly meeting between them, and a discussion of their differences, to the end that they may mutually agree upon such terms as will put an end to the strife and restore peace and tranquillity in the Republic.

2. In pursuance of the above desire, I called upon Governor Salazar on the 8th instant, accompanied by the United States vice-consul-general, Mr. Felix Ehrman, and tendered my good offices, which the governor accepted cordially, and informed me that he would be most pleased to have a friendly meeting with you, as suggested by me, for such amicable discussion, with a view to the settlement of existing differences and the restoration of peace.

3. I have the honor and pleasure to offer you my good offices in arranging for a friendly meeting and discussion with Governor Salazar, if you so desire, and would be most pleased to have you meet on board my flagship Wisconsin, at anchor off Panama.

4. It will be most gratifying to me and the Government I have the honor to represent if I can in any way be useful in prompting the restoration of peace and tranquillity in your country.

I have the honor to remain, yours, very cordially,

SILAS CASEY,
Rear-Admiral, U. S. Navy,
Commander in Chief U. S. Naval Force, Pacific Station.

Gen. BENJAMIN HERRERA,
Chief of Revolutionary Forces, District of Panama.

And the following order to Casey closes the door against all denial of the purpose of the entire campaign:

OCTOBER 29, 1902.

CASEY, Wisconsin, Panama:

While approving your attitude, the Department wishes to impress upon you that the relations of the United States with Colombia are much strained. You must adopt measures as conciliatory as is consistent with dignity United States, overlooking matter of minor importance. Negotiations for ship canal are at present at a standstill on account of a feeling of irritation on part of Colombian representative.

DARLING.

This completed the mission of the naval forces of the United States so suddenly concentrated at Panama in August and September, 1902, and secured Marroquin in his supremacy in Colombia.

No one can conceal from himself the fact that Marroquin appealed to the President of the United States for aid in suppressing the Liberals in Colombia, who had revolted nearly three years before on account of the extension of the Wyse concessions from 1904 to 1910, and that the President, in order to get the Hay-Herran treaty ratified, had actively aided Marroquin to overthrow Herrera and his victorious army.

The circle is complete, and within it are two years of our history and four years of the history of Colombia that have no parallel in grievous wrongs and audacious violations of law.

At the beginning and at the end, which the Senate is about to confirm, the New Panama Canal Company, backed by France, has been the real cause of all this indescribable sacrifice of human life, property, and national honor that now involves us in a sea of trouble, with worse to come.

This circle of history, from January, 1902, to January, 1904, while it was being enacted by the President in the secret councils of his high office, into which the American people never pry with curious or suspecting inquiry, was a sealed book to everybody until it was opened in his annual message to Congress in December, 1903.

It was an astonishment to the whole world, especially in the announcement that the President had determined to openly disobey the Spooner law in order to fulfill his preordained purpose to open a canal at Panama, or else that no canal would be constructed.

It is not surprising, in view of all that has occurred, that his lawless resolution alarmed some of our southern people, but it is surprising that they run to cover, under the shelter of the Presidential guns, rather than find it in a faithful reliance upon the Constitution and the laws, guarded by the abiding good faith and virtue of the American people.

The temptation of a supposed good bargain with the New Panama Canal Company drew him to the Panama route, which they had long since abandoned under the provisions of the Wyse concession, and from that hour he surrendered the policy and the powers of the United States to the guidance of that company.

It had inflicted civil war upon Colombia to compel that Republic to extend the Wyse concession from 1904 to 1910.

When that war reached Panama, and Herrera, the general of the Liberal army, had won the day and was ready to drive out Marroquin's army, the President moved in with our war ships and saved Marroquin.

There was trouble with Concha, as there had been with Silva, in closing the negotiation of a treaty with Colombia, and Marroquin made that the pretext for demanding our intervention in aid of his war in Panama, and it was granted.

Concha refused to sign the Hay-Herran treaty after it was agreed upon, because his conscience would not permit him to disobey the constitution and laws of Colombia, and he was recalled, but continued in office as minister to the United States, leaving Herran in charge of the legation as chargé d'affaires. He was instructed to sign the treaty, and did so.

Bunau-Varilla claims the credit of this diplomatic strategy. I hope that he alone is entitled to that distinction.

The treaty failed of ratification by the Congress of Colombia, and all our work in keeping Marroquin in office was lost.

Yet the canal transit was secured under the protection of the Marroquin Government, but the treaty went by the board and the proposed canal concessions with it, and the $40,000,000 for the New Panama Canal Company disappeared behind a clouded horizon.

France was called in to assist in restoring its power in Panama and came to the rescue.

All of a sudden we discovered that the exercise of sovereignty by the Marroquin Government was a threat against the security of the transit. We forgot how we had aided Marroquin in protecting the transit in 1903, while we thereby secured him in office as President of Colombia, and we suddenly turned upon his troops, sent to Panama to preserve the sovereignty of Colombia and the enforcement of its laws, and expelled them under the assumption that their appearance on that part of the Isthmus would endanger the transit.

All this confusion and repugnance as to the attitude of our Government toward Colombia and Panama and toward the security of the transit and the sovereignty of Colombia came from the determination of the President to locate the canal at Panama in despite of the Spooner law.

In every stage of the proceeding the New Panama Canal Company led, if it did not dictate, the policy of the President, and Bunau-Varilla and Cromwell were in at the death.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may remain on the table, without prejudice, subject to call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama ask that the resolution may lie on the table without prejudice, subject to his call. Is there objection? The Chair hear none, and that order is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That said agreement be, and the same is hereby, modified and amended so as to read as follows:

It is the intention of this agreement that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of said land and to expend and pay over the proceeds as received from the sale thereof only as received, as herein provided.

"ART. VI. This agreement shall take effect and be in force when accepted and ratified by the Congress of the United States."

SEC. 2. That said agreement be, and the same is hereby, accepted and ratified as herein amended.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to sell, subject to the homestead laws of the United States, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in tracts not to exceed 160 acres to each individual, all that part of the Red Lake Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, lying westerly of the range line between ranges 38 and 39 west of the fifth principal meridian, approximating 256,000 acres. And the said land shall be sold for not less than $4 per acre, and shall be sold upon the following terms: One-fifth of the price bid therefor to be paid at the time the bid is made, and the balance of the purchase price of said land to be paid in five equal installments, due in one, two, three, four, and five years from date of sale, respectively, payment to be made to the receiver of the United States land office for the district in which said land may be situated. And in case any purchaser fails to make such annual payments promptly when due, or within sixty days thereafter, all rights in and to the land covered by his or her purchase shall at once cease, and any payments made shall thereupon be forfeited, and the Secretary of the Interior shall thereupon declare such forfeiture by reoffering said land for sale.

And no patent shall issue to the purchaser until the purchaser shall have paid the purchase price and in all respects complied with the terms and provisions of the homestead laws of the United States: Provided, That such purchaser shall have the right of commutation as provided by section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, by paying for the land at the price for which it sold, receiving credit for payments previously made: Provided further, That such purchaser shall make his final proof conformable to the homestead laws within six years from the date of sale; that aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States may become purchasers under this act, but before making final proof and acquiring title must take out their full naturalization papers; and that persons who may have heretofore exhausted their rights under the homestead law may become purchasers under this act: Provided further, That after the first sale hereunder shall be closed, the lands remaining unsold shall be subject to sale and entry at the price of $4 per acre by qualified purchasers, subject to the same terms and conditions as herein prescribed as to lands sold at said first sale: Provided further, That all lands above described which shall remain unsold at the expiration of five years from the date of the first sale hereunder shall be offered for sale at not less than $4 per acre (and lands remaining untold after such sale shall be subject to private entry and sale at said price), without any conditions whatever except the payment of the purchase price: And provided further, That wherever the boundary line of said reservation runs diagonally so as to divide any Government subdivision of a section, and the owner of that portion of such subdivision now being outside of the reservation becomes the purchaser of that portion of such subdivision lying within the reservation, residence and improvements upon either portions of such subdivision as provided by the homestead law shall constitute a compliance as to all such Government subdivisions.

All of the Indians residing upon the tract above described shall remove therefrom to the diminished reservation within six months after the passage of this act; and there is hereby appropriated from the proceeds of said sale the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid to those thus removing in proportion to their respective improvements, which payment to the said Red Lake Indians shall be in full for all improvements which they will abandon, and also for the expense of removal within the diminished reservation of their dead from where they are now buried on the tract above described, and the expense of making allotments.

The proceeds of said lands as realized from time to time shall be paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of the Indians belonging on said reservation. Of the amount realized from the sale of said lands a sum not exceeding $300,000 shall be paid in cash, per capita, share and share alike, to each man, woman, and child belonging on said Red Lake Indian Reservation within ninety days after the first sale herein provided for, and the remainder of the proceeds of the sale of said lands shall be paid in cash, per capita, in fifteen annual installments, the first installment to be paid in the month of October of the year following that in which the payment of the $300,000 is made; and all moneys received after the expiration of said fifteen years shall be apportioned in like manner among said Indians and paid to them on the 1st day of October in each year.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby vested with full power and authority to make such rules and regulations as to the time of notice, manner of sale, and other matters incident to the carrying out of the provisions of this act as he may deem necessary, and with authority to continue making sale of said lands until all of said lands shall have been sold.

In addition to the price to be paid for the land, the entryman shall pay the same fees and commissions at the time of commutation or final entry as now provided by law where the price of the land is $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any portion of the land herein described, or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or any portion thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of said lands and to expend any pay over the proceeds received from the sale thereof only as received as herein provided.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The House of Representatives further amended the bill by prefixing thereto the following preamble:

Whereas James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, did, on the 10th day of March, A. D. 1902, make and conclude an agreement with the adult male Indians of the Red Lake Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, which said agreement is in words and figures as follows:

"This agreement made and entered into this 10th day of March, 1902, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States, and the Red Lake and Pembina bands of Chippewa Indians belonging on the Red Lake Reservation in the State of Minnesota, witnesseth:

"ARTICLE I. The said Indians belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., for the consideration hereinafter named, do hereby cede, surrender, grant, and convey to the United States all their claim, right, title, and interest in and to all that part of the Red Lake Indian Reservation situate within the boundaries of Red Lake County, Minn., as said county is at present defined and organized, the tract hereby ceded being more particularly described as embracing all that part of the said Red Lake Indian Reservation lying west of the range line between ranges 38 and 39 west of the fifth principal meridian, the tract of land hereby ceded approximating 256,152 acres, and also hereby agree that all of said Indians now residing on the tract hereby ceded shall remove to the diminished reservation within six months after the ratification of this agreement, and shall be paid not exceeding $5,000 in cash by the Indians of said Red Lake Reservation out of the first payment received by them from the proceeds of this cession, said $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid equitable to those thus removing, in proportion to the value of their respective improvements, which payment by said Red Lake Indians shall be in full for all improvements which they will abandon, and also for the removal within the diminished reservation of their dead from where they are now buried on the tract hereby ceded.

"ART. II. In consideration of the land ceded, relinquished, and conveyed by Article I of this agreement the United States stipulates and agrees to pay to said Indians, in the manner hereinafter provided, the sum of $1,000,000.

"ART. III. "ART. IV. It is further agreed that the said Indians belonging on said Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., shall possess their diminished reservation independent of all other bands of the Chippewa tribe of Indians and shall be entitled to allotments thereon of 160 acres each, of either agricultural or pine land, the different class of land to be apportioned as equitably as possible among the allottees.

"ART. V. It is understood that nothing in this agreement shall be construed to deprive the said Indians belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., of any benefits to which they are entitled under existing treaties for agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this agreement.

"ART. VI. This agreement shall take effect and be in force when signed by United States Indian Inspector James McLaughlin and by a majority of the male adult Indians, parties hereto, and when accepted and ratified by the Congress of the United States.

"In witness whereof the said James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States, and the male adult Indians belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., have hereunto set their hands and seals at Red Lake Indian Agency, Minn., this 10th day of March, A. And—

Whereas it is deemed for the best interests of the said Indians that said agreement be amended and modified as hereafter provided: Therefore,

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KEAN. May I inquire of the Senator whether this is the same bill that appears on the Calendar as No. 635 in the Order of Business, which was reported by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]?

Mr. NELSON. No. This bill relates to the Red Lake Reservation, in the State of Minnesota; and it meets with the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

The preamble was concurred in.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope we may now go to the Calendar, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first bill on the Calendar.

JAMES F. M'INDOE.

The bill (S. 1501) for the relief of James F. McIndoe was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James F. McIndoe, captain, Corps of Engineers, late first lieutenant, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, $1,142.70, that being the value of his personal effects destroyed by fire on the 13th of February, 1901, through the destruction by fire of the engineer quarters at Fort Hancock, N. J., as determined by a board of survey which met by order of Major-General Brooke at Fort Hancock, N. J., on the 15th of March, 1901.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. FULTON on the 14th ultimo.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not care to have the report read further, but I should like to have it all printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1501) for the relief of James F. McIndoe, begs leave to report as follows:

The purpose of this bill is to reimburse James F. McIndoe, captain, Corps of Engineers, in the sum of $1,142.70, being the value of his personal effects destroyed by fire on the 13th day of February, 1901, through the destruction by fire of the engineer quarters at Fort Hancock, N. J., as determined by a board of survey which met by order of Major-General Brooke at Fort Hancock, N. J., on the 15th day of March, 1901.

A bill similar to this was introduced in the first session Fifty-seventh Congress (S. 5531), was favorably reported by the Committee on Claims, and passed the Senate.

The evidence in this case shows that while Captain McIndoe was serving the United States in charge of fortification work at Fort Hancock, and while residing in the building provided by the United States for the officer charged with said duties, the same was totally destroyed by fire on the morning of February 13, 1901, due to defective construction of a chimney and to inflammable materials entering into the construction of the house. It appears from the testimony in the case that the fire originated from a defect in the chimney of the house. The fire burned very rapidly, and, according to the testimony of the witnesses, in twenty minutes after the fire was discovered access to the second floor was impossible.

Captain McIndoe testifies that every possible effort was made to save the building and property belonging to the United States; that owing to the efforts made to save the property of the United States the property of his own was destroyed of the value set out in this bill. The testimony of Captain McIndoe is corroborated by a number of other witnesses as to the origin of the fire and the speed with which it consumed the building occupied by him as a home. It further appears from the testimony of witnesses that owing to the high wind prevailing Captain McIndoe ordered the men under his control to desist from the efforts in saving his own property in order that their services might be used in preventing the ignition of other buildings belonging to the Government close at hand, and in which valuable supplies were stored.

In the opinion of the board of survey, Captain McIndoe sacrificed his personal property, which could probably have been saved, since the fire started in the attic of the building which he occupied, to save the Government property. The board of survey fixes the value of the property destroyed at the amount claimed in this bill, and which they claim was an amount of personal property reasonably useful, necessary, and proper for the claimant to have in the public service in the line of duty, and had Captain McIndoe, instead of trying to save the Government property, cared for his personal belongings, he could have saved them. They were, therefore, in the opinion of the board, lost while the claimant was protecting Government property, and they recommend that he be reimbursed in the amount of $1,142.70.

This claim was presented to the Auditor of the War Department and by him disallowed upon the ground that the destruction of the property for which reimbursement is claimed was not caused by an exigency of the military service, whereby the claimant was deprived of the control over said property which he would have had in civil life, or whereby the property was subjected to dangers not ordinarily incident to its use in civil life; and on the further ground that it did not appear that the destruction was caused by this claimant giving his attention to the saving of the property belonging to the United States.

As pointed out above, it appears to your committee that the testimony in this case shows that this property was lost while this claimant was giving his attention to the saving of the property of the United States.

The law authorizing a recovery in cases of this character provides that the proper officers of the Treasury shall "determine the value of the private property belonging to officers and enlisted men in the military service of the United States which has been, or may hereafter be, lost or destroyed in the military service, under the following circumstances:

"First. When such loss or destruction was without fault or negligence on the part of the claimant."

(The second item has no application to this case.)

"Third. Where it appears that the loss or destruction of the private property of the claimant was in consequence of his having given his attention to the saving of the property belonging to the United States which was in danger at the time and under similar circumstances."

The testimony in this case shows that the property of claimant was in an extra hazardous position by exigency of the military service. It appears from the testimony that the quarters occupied were the only quarters at Fort Hancock provided for the engineer officer on duty there.

It further appears that the location of the building was outside of the limits of every protection provided at the post against fire, and beyond adequate water supply for extinguishing fires. The testimony also shows that Captain McIndoe and others who were assisting him in efforts to put out the fire were compelled to carry water in pails for that purpose.

It appears to your committee that if Captain McIndoe had been at liberty to select his own place of residence he would have exercised ordinary care, and would have selected a place surrounded by the usual protection against fire.

After considering all of the testimony presented and the findings of the board of survey, and noting the recommendation of the said board, your committee is of the opinion that the demand of this claimant is just and that this bill should pass.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The report shows that this case is peculiar in this respect, that the officer in charge devoted his attention to saving the public buildings and neglected his own property, and that he might have saved his own property if he had not devoted his attention to the Government property. I make no objection to the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Right here I will say further that it shows that the fire started through no fault of his.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT TO EX-QUEEN LILIUOKALANI.

The bill (S. 1553) for payment to Liliuokalani, formerly Queen of the Kingdom of Hawaii, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "hundred," to insert "two;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Liliuokalani, formerly Queen of the Kingdom of Hawaii, in full satisfaction and discharge of all claim, legal and equitable, $200,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to propose an amendment, to strike out all after the word "Hawaii," in line 5, down to and including the word "equitable," in line 6.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is not heard here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, in lines 5 and 6, the following:

In full satisfaction and discharge of all claim, legal and equitable.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The purpose of the amendment is to make it a gift, without stating what we pay it for.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What is the motion of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That we strike out from the bill the following words:

In full satisfaction and discharge of all claim, legal and equitable.

I do not think she has any claim, legal or equitable.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There will be no divergence between the Senator from Connecticut and myself as to her having no legal claim.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We may just as well strike out those words and pay her the $200,000 without stating what we pay it for.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HOAR. I think myself the ex-Queen has equitable rights. If the Senator from Connecticut does not care to recognize them——

Mr. BLACKBURN. If I am entitled to the floor, I want to say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to say that the report made by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico accompanying this bill is a unanimous report. In that report it is expressly conceded that the beneficiary of this proposed legislation has no legal claim against the Government, but it is as expressly contended that she has a well-grounded equitable claim.

Mr. SPOONER. May I inquire of the Senator what is the equity?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer the Senator from Wisconsin and say that that equity, in the opinion of the committee, consists in this: Since the dethronement of the Queen and the taking possession of the Crown lands, which were hers so long as she retained the sovereignty of those islands, the Government has received for ten years, in round numbers, an average yearly rental of $45,000 from those lands. So about a half million of money has been collected since her dethronement as the rents of the Crown lands alone. In addition——

Mr. SPOONER. Does the committee predicate anything upon the theory that she was dethroned by the United States?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No. That, of course, was her contention and that of her adherents; but the committee in its report expressly disclaims any such purpose as that. In express language the committee holds that she has no legal claim against this Government for anything; but the committee recommends the payment of the $200,000, based upon the one item of consideration which I have stated in answer to the Senator from Wisconsin, and other considerations. These Crown lands were hers during her sovereignty. Whenever she ceased to be the sovereign, the Queen, of those islands, the Crown lands ceased to belong to her. In other words, they belonged to the Crown.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me? The Senator speaks of a report. I find no report accompanying the bill at this session of Congress. Was a report made in the last Congress?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was, by this committee, and was adopted for these purposes here. I would be glad to have that report read to the Senate, for it will show——

Mr. CULLOM. I think it ought to be read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It will show that the proposition of the payment of this money to her is not based altogether upon her deprivation of the rents of the Crown lands, which since her dethronement, as I tell you, have amounted to a half million that we have collected from them.

Mr. MITCHELL. The exact amount is $432,378.06.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right—$432,378.06, an average of $45,039.38 every year.

Mr. CULLOM. That amount has been put into the United States Treasury?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Now, as an additional consideration moving the committee to recommend the payment of this money, all of her personal property—I do not mean personal property; I mean property in contradistinction to her title to the Crown lands, the real estate that she had, the fee being in her—was taken.

Mr. SPOONER. Taken by whom—the Republic of Hawaii?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Republic established there upon the dethronement of the Queen.

Now, Mr. President, admitting, as the committee freely does, that this claimant has no status in court, that she has no legal ground upon which she can make any demand upon this Government, the committee by its unanimous action, in consideration of the facts that I have stated here, recommend that the sum of $200,000 be paid to her.

It must be understood and admitted—no one will deny it—that the conditions attaching were peculiarly hard upon this dethroned sovereign. There she was in more than comfortable circumstances. She had an annual rental of about $50,000 from lands that belonged to her so long as sovereignty was vested in her. She had a comfortable estate in her own right, all of which was lost. She was left with those retainers and dependents that you might naturally expect a sovereign to have depending upon her.

The legislature of Hawaii undertook to make provision, so far as it felt that it was able to do it, by voting her a stipend of $15,000 a year; and that it did. Taking the condition of the resources of the islands——

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me? It was $15,000 for two years.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Two years. There was a limit, and that was the limit. The two years' limit applied to that grant made by the legislature of the islands of Hawaii.

The whole case is stated. This dethroned Queen has no rights in law. She can not prosecute any demand against the Government. It is conceded in advance. It is simply a question of grace that commends itself to the conscience and the sense of fair dealing of every man here.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like the Senator to be, if he can, a little more explicit as to her equity from the standpoint of the United States. I understand that it is conceded that the Crown lands belonged to the Crown, to the Government.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is no controversy about that.

Mr. SPOONER. And that when by revolution she was dethroned and the government was changed, the title passed to the new sovereign——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Being a republic.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. As her successor.

Mr. SPOONER. That would not establish an equity.

Mr. HOAR. It is a part of the story.

Mr. SPOONER. Queens, like individuals, take their chances in this world of the vicissitudes of life. People have fortunes and lose them. Many a woman who has lived in luxury finds when her protector is removed by the hand of death that her method of living must change, and all that. It is all very sad, but of course it is perfectly clear from the Senator's statement that no claim could possibly have arisen in equity by this change in government, so far as the Crown lands go, even against the Republic of Hawaii, I should think.

How long was it after the Republic of Hawaii was established before we annexed Hawaii? I have forgotten.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can not give the Senator the exact date of annexation.

Mr. HOAR. Four or five years.

Mr. SPOONER. I can not for the life of me see any equity——

Mr. BLACKBURN. The overthrow of the Queen's Government occurred on the 17th of January, 1893.

Mr. SPOONER. When did we annex the islands?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That exact date I am not prepared to give the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. In the winter of 1897-98.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the rentals which the Senator figures in the aggregate to amount to $400,000 include the rentals received by the Republic of Hawaii from the time of its establishment to the time of annexation?

Mr. BLACKBURN. They were received by the Republic of Hawaii.

Mr. SPOONER. Up to the time of annexation?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Up to the time of the annexation of the islands to the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The United States Government did not receive it.

Mr. SPOONER. But has received it since?

Mr. BLACKBURN. But has received it since the date of annexation.

Mr. SPOONER. That is to say, the Territory has received it. Have we?

Mr. MITCHELL. No; the United States received it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The United States has seen fit to apply to the uses of the Hawaiian Islands the money here described, but it was the United States that made the application of the money and not——

Mr. SPOONER. If she had no claim whatever upon the Crown lands, there is nothing to argue from that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator——

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator what there is to be said a little more explicitly about the other lands that she owned in fee and which it is supposed the United States has acquired. There might be some equity in that which we should recognize.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no right to assume, and I do not assume, that the Senator wants to involve me in any discussion——

Mr. SPOONER. I have forgotten the fact.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Of the question as to whether the United States Government is to any extent or in any degree responsible for the overthrow of this Queen's Government.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have very decided convictions in my own mind about that responsibility.

Mr. SPOONER. If we were, there might be some theory of equity on which we ought to pay, perhaps.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have very pronounced opinions upon that subject, and the Senator may not agree with those conclusions; but that is beside the question presented by this committee.

Mr. SPOONER. What I should like to have the Senator point me to—he may have done so when the matter was before the Senate at the last session—is what equity is based upon the loss of the lands to which she had the fee. I do not see how, if she had the fee, it could be lost without some judicial proceeding. I would not suppose annexation could do it, but there may be something in that phase of the case which would afford an equitable basis for an appropriation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have not before me the report made to the last Congress by this committee upon the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think probably the Senator from Oregon has that report at his desk.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think there was any report.

Mr. KEAN. We have not been able to find any.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think there was any report made.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Kentucky is speaking of the report made by the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The report made by the committee to the Fifty-seventh Congress.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have sent to the document room for it, and they can not find it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has the Senator from Oregon the report before him?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is the report of a committee which went to the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is not a report on this bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. And it has been indorsed by the full committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The full committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But it is not a report made by the committee on this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. No.

Mr. KEAN. I see that we are proceeding with the Calendar under Rule VIII, and I suppose an objection will carry this bill over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Senate is not proceeding under Rule VIII. It applies up to 2 o'clock, and not after 2 o'clock.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey——

Mr. KEAN. I merely asked the question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I was going to suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that I would hardly be disposed to yield the floor to have that objection made.

Mr. KEAN. We have sent and tried to get copies of the report, and the clerks have been unable to get them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The report was made by a subcommittee that was sent to the Hawaiian Islands. The subcommittee treated of this matter very elaborately and fully in the report which it made to the full committee. The full committee indorsed it and unanimously recommended the passage of this bill.

The point the Senator from Wisconsin is inquiring about now is as to the additional ground for the basing of an equity as to the extent of the property owned by this Queen in fee as in contradistinction to the holding that she had as sovereign of what is known as the "Crown lands."

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, that, I believe, is treated of in the report in the hands of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not understand that any lands that the Queen held in fee were ever appropriated by the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. They could not be.

Mr. MITCHELL. They could not be and were not. What is in the mind of the Senator who has charge of the bill is the fact that a great amount of her personal property, which was her individual property, was taken.

Mr. SPOONER. Taken by whom?

Mr. MITCHELL. Taken——

Mr. BLACKBURN. By the Republic of Hawaii?

Mr. MITCHELL. Taken by the Republic of Hawaii and appropriated.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, further answering the Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me at this point?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to read, if the Senator will allow me for a moment, the conclusions reached by the committee after discussing at some length the whole situation; the nature of her claims; the nature of these Crown lands, so called, and the amount of rentals paid in from year to year. The committee concluded thus:

> First. That the legal and equitable title to all the lands hereinbefore referred to as "Crown lands" is in the United States, and has been since the date of annexation.
> Second. The legal title to these lands never vested personally in the former Queen Liliuokalani, but was held by her as sovereign in trust for herself as sovereign and her successors on the throne.
> Third. From the date she ascended the throne to the date of her dethronement Queen Liliuokalani was entitled, as her individual separate estate, with the right to use and dispose of it as she pleased, to the entire rents accruing from these "Crown lands."

That was her personal property. If there had been no change in government in the islands; if she was still living as she is and had not been dethroned, she would to-day be entitled, as her individual separate property, to dispose of it as she might see proper—to give it away or use it in any shape, manner, or form, to the entire rentals of these Crown lands.

> Fourth. That by the dethronement of the Queen and the establishment of a provisional government in its stead, which was recognized not only by the people of Hawaii, including the ex-Queen, but by all the civilized nations of the globe, all legal claim of the late Queen to any of these Crown lands and to any future revenues arising therefrom was, under the well-understood principles of international law, at once and forever cut off; and
> Fifth. Whatever allowance is made to the ex-Queen by the Government of the United States can not and must not be based upon any legal right upon her part or be in recognition of any legal claim on her part on account of loss of her sovereignty or Crown lands, but must rest solely upon considerations of national grace, public and private justice, political policy, and fair, equitable dealing upon the part of a great and powerful nation—principles always recognized in the great unerring forum of the individual and national conscience.

> Your committee further finds, from an examination of the records of the late Republic and the existing Territorial government, that the total amount of rentals of these crown lands received by the Government since the date of the queen's overthrow, January 17, 1893, to September 1, 1902, was $432,378.06, or an average per annum for a period of nine years and six months of $45,039.38, and all of which have since the date of the overthrow been taken and used by the respective governments which succeeded the monarchy, namely, the provisional government, the Republic, and later and now the Territorial government.

That is the case, Mr. President, as I understand it.

Mr. STEWART. Does the United States get the money now?

Mr. MITCHELL. The United States is receiving the money now.

Mr. SPOONER. If the ex-Queen is entitled to a moiety, why give her a lump sum?

Mr. MITCHELL. There is no suggestion in the report, from beginning to end, that she should have a moiety or any other sum as a matter of absolute right, but on the principle of national grace and fair play, under all the circumstances, between a great and powerful nation and those people, it is suggested that it would be good policy on the part of the Government, to say nothing else, to make her recompense of some kind, of some amount, not necessarily to be gauged by the amount of rentals received.

I will state that the committee, on visiting the islands, was forced into this inquiry very much against its will; but, as the report shows, the petition was presented at length on the Queen's part and a demand was made on the committee that we investigate the facts and make such report as we might think proper under the circumstances. We did. We inquired into the sentiment of the people there, and we found one thing that very agreeably surprised me, Mr. President. Before I visited those islands and heard the testimony of all sides I had been led to believe from what had been uttered in the Senate some years ago and what I had seen in the papers that this lady was not entitled to any consideration from anybody. Commencing with Governor Dole, who was born there, witness after witness was called upon the stand and sworn, all classes and parties being heard—parties who represented the monarchy, parties who represented those who had pulled down the monarchy—and without a solitary dissenting voice they all testified to the high character of that woman.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL. One moment.

They testified not only to her high character, but to her many good qualities as a woman, a literary woman, a charitable woman, as a woman whose character and reputation had never been assailed by those who knew her, but only by those who did not know her. And furthermore they gave it as their opinion, without a dissenting voice, that nothing could go so far to harmonize matters in that new part of our country as to do something in the way of a contribution to the Queen, not based on any legal or equitable claim, if you please.

Mr. SPOONER. Why do you not put it in that way?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the way we do put it. That is the way the report puts it. It was stated that nothing would go so far to harmonize matters and quiet matters in those islands. Now I will hear the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator by what process——

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to the Senator that I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am entirely willing that the Senator should go on.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to know by what process the title to the lands that were the personal property of the Queen passed from her.

Mr. SPOONER. There were none.

Mr. HEYBURN. And to whom did they pass?

Mr. BLACKBURN. This Government had nothing to do with any loss that the Queen sustained in the matter of any property belonging to herself in fee. This Government had nothing to do, it is assumed by the committee in its report, with the conversion of the rentals from the Crown lands, even to the provisional government and the Republic of Hawaii.

But, answering first the question submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin, I would say that it is not exactly the case that he described, that so often unfortunately occurs where people are brought down from affluence to want. In this case the poverty which overtook this dethroned monarch was not the result of any fault of hers. It was as the result of a political revolution.

Now, admitting for the sake of the argument that this Government had nothing to do with bringing about that condition of affairs; admitting for the sake of the argument that this Government had no collusion with or knowledge of the intention and purposes that resulted in the dethronement of this Queen, still the fact remains that this Government did become the recipient of that very overthrow of government to the extent of the rentals of these lands from the date of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands until now.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question at that point which seems pertinent?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Crown lands do not appeal to me at all as the basis of any sympathy or the foundation for making an appropriation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I am afraid we can not reach the Senator's sympathy at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. But I understood the Senator to say that there were, in addition to those Crown lands, certain lands the fee of which was in the Queen.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; I did not say lands. I said property and estate that this woman had in her own right.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. I understood the Senator to say "lands."

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; I did not say "lands."

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I should like to ask if the Senator can give us any information as to the character of that estate and to whom it passed when it passed from her?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has already answered that question and told you that the property passed into the hands of the provisional government.

Mr. SPOONER. The personalty?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; the personalty that she had in her own right.

Mr. HEYBURN. Do I understand that the only personal estate that she had and that she lost was the rental of the Crown lands?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; by no means.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator if it is not true that she sets forth in her petition (and that petition is copied in the report which has just been read by the senior Senator from Oregon), that she has lost these Crown lands, and that she has lost the rent of them, and is it not true that she bases her entire claim for equity on the ground that she lost the rent of those lands, and that she does not make any claim that she lost any property which she had?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; that is not true.

Mr. CLAY. I have the petition here before me, I will state to the Senator, and I have just read it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have the brief filed by her counsel in my hand. That is not true. Upon the contrary, it is expressly set up, not as a basis upon which to predicate a legal demand against the Government, but as a matter properly to be considered, that all of the property, of the estate, of the personalty, of which she was possessed, independent of her right of sovereignty, passed from her possession and was taken forcible possession of by the Government that succeeded the crown government.

Mr. CLAY. Did our Government get any of it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If our Government did not, our Government's ward did. The provisional government was the one that succeeded the monarchy. The Republic of Hawaii succeeded the provisional government. Then came the process of annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to this Government, and from the day of the dethronement of this woman either the provisional government or the Republic of Hawaii or the Government of the United States has been the recipient, in the order named, of a rental of, in round numbers, $50,000 a year, of which this woman was deprived.

The Senator from Georgia states the case correctly. She does say that her rents from the Crown lands were cut off. She does say that whatever estate she had aside from and independent of the Crown lands was taken from her. Both statements are true. Both statements are here to-day without contradiction.

Now, she comes, not in her own right nor in her own person, but she comes before the Senate through a committee of this body and asks that this sum of money shall be given to her; and that committee, speaking for her, frankly concedes that there is no legal claim upon which she can rest.

It is needless to go into the broader question as to whether there is an equitable claim. The Senator from Wisconsin thinks there is not. That question may be determined by what construction you put upon the term equity. If equity means a claim that reaches to an honest conscience, then it seems to me, as it seemed to this committee, that this woman has an equitable claim.

It is not really binding the cases the Senator from Wisconsin seemed to suppose—cases of misfortune where poverty comes to those who have been inured to luxury. This is a stronger case. Not only did this poverty come to this woman without fault of her own, but, waiving the question as to whether it was brought about by the action of the Federal Government, it must be admitted that our Government has become the beneficiary of her misfortunes to the extent of several times over the amount that it is proposed by this bill to donate to her.

Now, I have but one more thing to say, and that I have already said. There is no ground here upon which to base a legal claim. There is no ground here upon which an action could be brought against a government, even if the government would waive its sovereignty and admit itself liable to be sued. There is no ground here upon which a bill could be predicated in a court of equity. That is all conceded. It is frankly admitted that the only proposition submitted to the Senate to determine is as to whether in good conscience and fair dealing this bill should not pass.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, it is a little difficult, because somewhat ungracious, perhaps, for one to antagonize a proposition so persuasively presented as this is by the Senator from Kentucky. He is a sympathetic man, and I think most of us are sympathetic men. I have listened to all he has had to say, and all the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has had to say, and I can not for the life of me see from their statement upon what conceivable basis this appropriation can be justified.

We are not appropriating our own money. We are the conservators of the money belonging to the United States, raised by taxation in one form and another. We go to the limit sometimes in appropriations out of sympathy. Here is a proposition to appropriate $200,000 out of the Treasury to Liliuokalani, the dethroned Queen of the Hawaiians.

It certainly is not enough to warrant this appropriation that she is a woman of good character—that, as far as I am concerned, goes without saying—or that she is a woman of literary taste and ability. We have many a woman in this country of fine literary taste and ability struggling from day to day to live, even. But the Government can not appropriate money to aid them on any such ground as that, although kind-hearted people who are affluent might well enough help, and they many times do; and sometimes help is withheld where it might be easily given.

It is not pretended that her loss of the Crown lands affords any legal or equitable basis. I ask my friend from Oregon——

Mr. MITCHELL. I have already stated that it furnishes no basis for either a legal or an equitable claim that may be enforced in the courts.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President!

Mr. MITCHELL. At the same time the Senator knows there is a court of conscience. There is a court of fair play, as between nations, between countries, between governments, that has no place and is not recognized in a court. The Senator is lawyer enough (because he is one of the best lawyers if not the very best in the United States) to know that.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope I am lawyer enough to see that the observations of the Senator form not even a shadow of a foundation for this appropriation. He admits, as he must admit, that there is no legal claim and that there is no equitable claim which could be enforced.

Mr. MITCHELL. In a court.

Mr. SPOONER. In a court.

Mr. MITCHELL. I admit it.

Mr. SPOONER. I yield as quickly to an appeal to conscience, and so does the Senator, and so do the Senate, and so does the country, as any man or body of men in this world. Where is the appeal to conscience on what the Senator states in this case? Nothing, Mr. President; absolutely nothing. Why not? Liliuokalani was the sovereign of the Hawaiias. She was dethroned as sovereigns all through the history of the world have been dethroned—not by us. The Senator does not claim that we were the cause of her dethronement. If the Senator urged that and asked us to do penance by this appropriation for a governmental wrong, there would be something to debate. But they dispute that. They are careful to file a caveat as to that.

Now, what is there left? On the ruins of the monarchy was erected the Republic of Hawaii, which by operation of law became the successor of the monarchy in the ownership, and therefore in the right to the usufruct of the Crown lands. The Republic of Hawaii existed as a government, taking to herself the rental and profits of this land, for four years or more, until by agreement or compact between the United States and the Republic of Hawaii that Republic committed suicide and became merged with the United States, the property of the United States.

I can readily believe that the men who dethroned her out there and her followers surround these kind-hearted members of the Senate and favor an appropriation of this kind to Liliuokalani. Perhaps they who dethroned her feel that they wronged her and would be glad to have some other purse than theirs open to reparation for their wrong. But the Senators do not urge that.

We took Hawaii, Mr. President. I voted against it. I think it would have been better for Hawaii had she not been acquired by the United States, and I think our purposes would have been subserved quite as well by fortifying and improving Pearl Harbor, which we owned. But that has gone by.

What was our agreement with Hawaii? Did she come to us without cost? Did we take her to govern her and protect her and safeguard her people for all time without burden? There is an inherent burden in such an ownership.

But we did more than that. We assumed, in the joint resolution by which we acquired Hawaii, the public indebtedness of Hawaii of every description, with a simple proviso that it should not exceed $4,000,000. I have no doubt it reached that maximum. Has the Senator information about that?

Mr. MITCHELL. It was more.

Mr. SPOONER. I remember after that we passed some laws which added largely to the expenditures. The United States therefore did not simply embrace the Republic of Hawaii and hold it in its embrace. It bought the territory, took the debt, and is expending large sums of money, I take it, as is true as to other territory, in administering from the national standpoint their affairs.

Now, Mr. President, there is not a shadow of foundation for this claim so far as the Crown lands are concerned, nothing that would appeal to the court, nothing that can appeal to the conscience of a trustee who is called upon to pay out other people's money.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senate thought differently once, because it passed this precise bill in the last Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. I opposed it.

Mr. MITCHELL. You are consistent.

Mr. SPOONER. I know I am consistent. It does not follow because the Senate passes bills that they ought to be passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. And it does not follow because the Senator opposes bills that they ought not to pass.

Mr. SPOONER. No. Notwithstanding my opposition to this bill, it passed, and perhaps it will pass now, but it will not pass with my vote.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not this bill passed.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know about this particular bill.

Mr. KEAN. It was an appropriation of $200,000 made in an appropriation bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. The amount was the same.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, therefore, out of the Crown lands what is left? This shadowy claim for personal property which passed from the empire or monarchy to the Republic. What was it for which we are to pay $200,000? After a rather vigorous cross-examination I have elicited from the Senator from Oregon, who must know the fact, that it was furniture. We can replace that furniture, I presume, by an expenditure very much short of $200,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I can not find in the petition which was presented by the ex-Queen to this committee that she makes any mention of having lost any furniture.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to state, if the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, that there is really no claim of that character presented. The Senator is right. There is nothing in her petition of that kind. It came into the case in the way of some testimony and in the way of briefs of parties. I never took a particle of stock in it so far as that is concerned.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I can not find in the report which the subcommittee made to the full committee that they placed any stress upon that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to state, as one member of the committee, that, in my judgment, if there is not some kind of claim on the part of this woman growing out of the Crown lands—that is, out of the proceeds of the Crown lands—then I do not think she has any claim at all, and she ought not to have a cent. That is my opinion and has been from the first in regard to this matter. But I do think, and I have always thought since I have investigated it, that there is a claim here, not a legal claim, not an equitable one that could be enforced in a court, but one which as between this great nation and the former sovereign of Hawaii ought to have consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, there is not.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator understands what I mean. He did from the first, but would not admit it.

Mr. SPOONER. I only understand what the Senator means by what the Senator says.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have said the same thing all the time.

Mr. SPOONER. I understand the Senator to say that there is no claim here, in his judgment, either legal or equitable.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator did not put in the qualification. I did not state the proposition as he has stated it.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I am going to state the balance of it. The thing is as unsubstantial

> As a painted ship
> Upon a painted ocean.

That is all there is to it.

Now, what international question is there here, Mr. President? Hawaii is not a nation. There is no international relation between the United States and Hawaii. The Republic of Hawaii, the independent Republic of Hawaii, is dead. She agreed to annex her territory, and died in the operation.

When the Senator talks about international questions, there is nothing on earth except the claim of Liliuokalani that she was once a monarch and is a monarch no longer; that she had once a large income from Crown lands and is no longer entitled to an income from Crown lands, and that in process of time for $4,000,000, and vastly more, this Republic has acquired Hawaii, and therefore we ought to pay her $200,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not exactly understand the status of the Crown lands, and I should like to have the Senator inform me. Was the title in the hands of the Queen or in the monarchy?

Mr. SPOONER. The title was in the Government. It was in the Queen and her successors on the throne. The fee was not in the individual. It was passed by succession.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was public land.

Mr. SPOONER. Public land, which passed by succession. When the monarchy was destroyed and the new government erected in its place it became of course the owner of what had been the Crown lands. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WARREN. The Queen had the income.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course the income was for her special benefit. She was entitled to the income, but after she ceased to be entitled to the income, when her sovereignty, by virtue of which alone she was entitled to any benefit from those lands, was destroyed, that ended it, so far as she was concerned, as much as if she had died.

Now, others may vote, and will vote, upon this proposition as they choose. I can not vote for it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, the amendment which I proposed was more for the purpose of bringing the character of this claim distinctly before the Senate than because I cared whether those words remained in the bill or not. Here is a bill which proposes to pay Liliuokalani, formerly Queen of the Kingdom of Hawaii, "in full satisfaction and discharge of all claim, legal and equitable, $200,000." I moved to strike out the words "in full satisfaction and discharge of all claim, legal and equitable." I am now told by those who favor the bill that it is admitted that this ex-Queen has no claim, legal or equitable, and yet they report a bill here which proposes to pay her $200,000 in discharge of all her claim, legal and equitable, against the Government of the United States.

It being admitted that she has no claim, legal or equitable, the words ought to go out, at any rate, and if anything is to be paid, it ought to be a mere naked gratuity.

Mr. KEAN. A gift.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. A gift; and that is the ground upon which I find the subcommittee put it. I have had time to look over their report to the full committee hastily, and they say what I shall read. I think the Senator from Oregon read it. They say:

> Fifth. Whatever allowance is made to the ex-Queen by the Government of the United States can not and must not be based upon any legal right upon her part or be in recognition of any legal claim on her part on account of loss of her sovereignty of Crown lands, but must rest solely upon considerations of national grace, public and private justice, political policy, and fair, equitable dealing upon the part of a great and powerful nation, principles always recognized in the great unerring forum of the individual and national conscience.

So that we come to this: Is there any reason why, upon "considerations of national grace, public and private justice, political policy, and fair, equitable dealing," we should pass this little bill of $200,000 for this ex-Queen? It seems to me, Mr. President, that even upon this ground this bill can not be sustained. I think the committee ought not to have inserted those words, "national grace." What is national grace? I do not see that that has anything to do with the matter.

"Public and private justice." It is admitted that there is no payment to be made here on the ground of either public or private justice.

"Political policy." What is there of political policy which should lead this Government to make this appropriation?

"Fair, equitable dealing upon the part of a great and powerful nation." It has been admitted in the discussion here that there is no equitable claim and no legal claim. What the committee ought to have said, if they wanted to put it upon the exact ground on which they are putting it here, is "on account of our sympathy for the ex-Queen."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Suppose the Senator's amendment were agreed to and the phraseology he suggests were employed, would he then support the bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No, Mr. President; I think I would not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not because I claim to have less sympathy than other Senators, but because I do not think that is a good ground on which to vote away the Government money. As the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] well said, it is hard to oppose claims which appeal to the sympathies of Senators, but I think we ought to do it. I do not think we can establish the principle here, whenever any person comes to us with an appeal which reaches our sympathies, that we are to donate to them the public money.

With regard to the matter of pensions, if we were simply to grant pensions according to our sympathies, there would be no end of the amount of money this Government would pay out. It would bankrupt the Government. We do not collect money enough year by year to pay to the old soldiers and their widows in this country the amount which our sympathies would call upon us to pay them. We must have rules about all these matters, and it would be establishing a very bad precedent to pay out the Government money simply upon the ground of sympmpathy.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it seems to me that this bill might be denominated "A bill to provide for the payment of five years' salary in arrears to the ex-Queen of Hawaii." She was not the Queen of Hawaii when we took the steps which resulted in our acquiring that country. Her income is said to have been about $40,000 a year, derived from the public lands, or Crown lands, as they were termed. When we dealt with the Government which then was in control of Hawaii, there were no Crown lands belonging to this ex-Queen. They had passed to the Government with which we dealt, and by virtue of the public resolution approved July 7, 1898, they passed to us.

The inquiry which I made of the Senator who represented this measure when it first came up to-day was for the purpose of determining whether there was a claim on her part for anything at all beyond or outside of the public lands.

Had there been any lands the fee of which rested in the Queen, then they would not have been affected by anything which has resulted from the transfer of sovereignty, because the title to private lands was not affected by that transfer. It remained just where it was before. I desired to obtain the information as to whether or not there were any such lands, and then to follow it with the inquiry as to why we should be making provision here to indemnify the ex-Queen for the loss of lands when she had not lost them. If she owned any property in Hawaii she owns it now, unless she has voluntarily parted with it.

I have before me the instrument by which sovereignty or title to the Crown lands, as they are termed, passed to the United States; and it does not propose to pass title to the United States out of any person to any private lands.

It seems to me that a payment of this kind is a tacit admission that the Government did something for which it should make indemnity; it carries that sentiment with it. We did not deal with this deposed Queen at all in acquiring sovereignty over those lands. We dealt with a recognized government, which passed to us what it had; and this Queen passed to us nothing that she had. It is the flimsiest kind of a claim to assert that she lost the income from those lands. She never had the income except by virtue of her sovereignty. We did not recognize her sovereignty; we did not deal with her on the strength of her sovereignty; and, consequently, we owe her nothing either in law or in equity.

If you are going to make a present of $200,000 to this deposed Queen, say so candidly, and let the bill read in that way, that this sum of money shall be paid to her because of the high character she bears and the high esteem in which we hold her, and be candid with the people; but to vote away $200,000 under an implied, tacit admission that we have done some wrong to the person to whom we vote it does not meet with my approval, and shall not receive my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the word "Hawaii," it is proposed to strike out "in full satisfaction and discharge of all claim, legal and equitable."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, before the word "hundred," the committee propose to fill the blank by inserting the word "two;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Liliuokalani, formerly Queen of the Kingdom of Hawaii, $200,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire whether the rejection of that amendment does not leave a blank in the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does leave a blank.

Mr. MALLORY. The blank ought to be filled. I suggest as an amendment that the word "hundred" be stricken out and "one hundred and fifty" be inserted in lieu thereof; so as to read "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. MALLORY. I think I shall have to ask for a division on that, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. We may as well have the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask that the amendment may be again stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty."

Mr. SPOONER. Is it in order, Mr. President, to move to recommit the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I move that the bill be recommitted to the committee from which it came.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to recommit the bill to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. MITCHELL. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and so I will withhold my vote.

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. As I do not see him in the Chamber and I do not know how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McCREARY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA]. I do not know how he would vote if present. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I do not see him in his seat, and therefore I will withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I think I recall the circumstance that heretofore he took strong ground one way or the other on this matter; but, however that may be, I do not feel at liberty to vote, and will withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I inquire if the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore will refrain from voting.

Mr. CLAY (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. CLAY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts, and therefore I will withdraw my vote.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 12, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast ever been our refuge and our strength, our inspiration, and our guide through all the vicissitudes of the past, we bless Thee for our Republic, now known and honored in all the earth, and we most fervently pray that it may continue a potent factor in the civilizing influences of the world; we thank Thee for the illustrious souls whose names gild the pages of our history and whose deeds will live in the hearts of men. We are minded to-day of one of the foremost in our nation's annals, "who, great in his goodness and good in his greatness," bore the sorrows of his people, East, West, North, and South, through four years of civil strife and died a martyr to his convictions. "Peace to his ashes and repose to his soul." His was the suffering; ours but a humble tribute to his memory. Help us so to live that men will rise up and call us blessed; and Thine be the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire, with the consent of the House, to make a statement about my vote yesterday. I voted against the St. Louis Exposition loan, intending to withdraw that vote in the event that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] was not present and voting. At the time I should have withdrawn my vote my attention was diverted to another matter until too late to do so. A few moments after the House adjourned I received a telegram from Mr. HILL stating, what I had supposed to be the fact, that he was opposed, like myself, to that proposition, and that I could vote as I pleased.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

FUNERAL EXPENSES, ETC., OF WILLIAM H. MANKIN.

Mr. GRAFF. I desire to report back with amendments from the Committee on Accounts a privileged resolution.

The resolution No. 154 was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House miscellaneous items, 1903, to Mary J. Mankin, widow of William H. Mankin, late an employee of the House under the direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, a sum equal to six months of his salary, and an additional sum not to exceed $250 to defray the expenses of the last illness and burial of said William H. Mankin.

The following amendments, reported by the Committee on Accounts, were read:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "an employee" and insert "a laborer in the employ."

In line 9 strike out the words "last illness and."

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say by way of explanation that when I reported this resolution in the House a few days ago, an inquiry was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] as to whether this man had been an employee of the Architect of the Capitol or had been on the regular House roll. At that time I was not in possession of the facts, and the matter was passed over until I could ascertain them. I have now ascertained that he was on the regular House roll, so that his case comes clearly within the custom which has been adopted by the House in regard to these matters. I move the adoption of the resolution with the amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Allow me to inquire whether there are any precedents for this appropriation?

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, yes; a long line.

Mr. BARTLETT. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, this is a report from the Committee on Accounts with reference to the burial expenses and six months' pay of an employee of the House.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir. The only question about the matter was as to whether he had been on the regular House roll or not.

Mr. BARTLETT. He was, I understand.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

The question being taken on the amendments reported by the committee, they were agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

CRIMINAL CASES IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10136) authorizing bail in criminal cases upon appeal in the courts of Indian Territory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon appeals in all criminal cases from inferior courts to the United States district courts, and from the district courts to the court of appeals, in the Indian Territory, the defendants shall be admitted to bail pending the final determination of the cases upon appeal except in capital cases. The amount of bail shall be fixed by the court trying the case or by one of the judges of the court of appeals and taken and approved by the marshal of the district in which the prosecution is pending. Such bond shall be conditional for the appearance of the defendant at all times, when required in the prosecution of said appeal, and that he will surrender himself in execution of the final judgment therein.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall apply to all cases now pending upon appeal in the courts of the Indian Territory.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary, were read:

In line 8, after the word "fixed," insert the words "and the bond shall be approved."

In line 10, after the word "appeals," strike out "and taken and approved by the marshal of the district in which the prosecution is pending."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear an explanation regarding this bill from the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. I notice the amendment strikes out the words "providing for the approval of the bond by the marshal" and inserts the words "and the bond shall be approved." I wish to ask the gentleman who will approve the bond?

Mr. LITTLE. The judge who tries the case in the trial court.

Mr. PAYNE. The amendment does not show that, and I wanted to get at the fact.

Mr. LITTLE. It so appears in the bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GRANDE RONDE RESERVATION, OREG.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 11966) providing for the ratification of an agreement with the Indians of the Grande Ronde Reservation, in the State of Oregon, be taken from the Union Calendar and considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that the same be made a special order, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or other privileged matters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon makes a request which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill (H. R. 11966) providing for the ratification of an agreement with the Indians of the Grande Ronde Reservation, in the State of Oregon, be taken from the Union Calendar and considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that the same be made a special order, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or other privileged matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Oregon whether this bill contains the same provisions that the other bills contained that have passed the House in reference to Indian lands?

Mr. HERMANN. It is substantially the same as those which have recently passed, except that it does not appropriate any money whatever. It provides for the sale of the lands and the obtaining of the money due the Indians from the proceeds of the land.

Mr. PAYNE. How much land is involved?

Mr. HERMANN. About 28,000 acres—a small tract of land. The bill is unanimously reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9 strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am sorry that the chairman of the committee is not in his seat.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana to the committee amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few observations upon this amendment. I regret very much to attempt to change the rate that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has recommended. I appreciate as much as any Member of this House the care and patience that this committee has employed and does employ in going through the great mass of special legislation referred to it, and I am thoroughly in sympathy with the general policy of the committee that the rates established by special legislation shall not be exorbitant. But in this case I think, Mr. Chairman, the circumstances are such that the rate ought to be fixed at $30 a month at least. The bill originally provided for a special pension of $50 a month. The committee have reported an amendment reducing the rate from $50 to $24.

Phillip Duttenhaver is totally disabled. The evidence in the case shows that during his military service he had intermittent and malarial fever. His system became completely saturated with malaria. It poisoned his system so that he was in a hospital a number of times during his service. After he was discharged from the service, on the 18th of September, 1865, within two months after that time, the evidence shows that a sore appeared on his right knee, and that sore continued to increase gradually, and to grow worse and worse, until it finally disabled him absolutely. He was a farmer, and after his discharge from the service, with his system poisoned with malaria in the manner that I have described, he made no complaint, but went upon the farm and hoped that in the course of time he would overcome the disabilities he incurred in the military service. He employed no physician; he applied for no pension. In 1884 his condition became so bad that he did apply for a pension under the old law. That application was rejected because he was unable to prove continuous disability from malarial poisoning from September, 1865, until the year 1880. The excuse he offered for not furnishing the required evidence was his own sworn statement that after his discharge he thought he would get well, and he had made no complaint, but went on in the even tenor of his way, taking care of himself and his family as best he could until his condition became so bad that he had to apply to a physician for medical assistance.

His claim for original pension was rejected. After the law of 1890 was enacted he made application and was given a pension under that law, but his leg gradually grew worse, and in the year 1903 he was compelled to have it amputated above the knee. He is a poor man. He owns, the evidence shows, a little cottage in the town of Kentland, worth not exceeding $1,200, which is mortgaged for $900, and his wife is living. He is 60 years of age. The committee in its report said that there is no doubt that while the evidence in the case does not justify the Commissioner of Pensions in granting him a pension under the original law, under the rules in force in the Pension Office, there is no doubt his military service is responsible for the disability which he has to-day, and if that be true he ought to have $65 a month, but I only asked originally $50, and this motion asks simply that this committee give him the rate of $30 a month.

Now, I desire to say to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I believe that the rate of $50 a month is a very small rate for this disability, and the report of his committee shows that the condition of Duttenhaver is the result of his military service. He needs the pension. I know Mr. Duttenhaver personally, and I have known him for a number of years, and I know him to be an upright, respectable citizen, but absolutely helpless, with a wife to support and his home mortgaged for substantially all it is worth, and the rate of $24 a month is not sufficient to take care of him and his wife during the balance of his days. I ask the committee now to adopt the amendment that I propose fixing the rate at $30, which I think is a very small rate for such a disability.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to antagonize the increase asked for by the gentleman, but I think it is due to the committee that our position in this matter should be explained. It has been the uniform custom of the committee, Mr. Chairman, not to increase the pension of a soldier who has been pensioned under the act of 1890 more than double the pension he is now receiving unless he is totally blind or so greatly incapacitated as to require the constant aid and attendance of another. We have undertaken to treat this soldier exactly as we have treated all other cases coming before the committee. This man is evidently in a very bad fix. The committee sympathizes with him, but if the gentleman will take occasion to read the report you will observe that his first application for a pension was made in 1884, twenty years after the war, and in it there was no reference to an injury to his leg, for which he is now claiming a pension.

Twenty years after the war that injury had not sufficiently developed as to make it worth his while to claim a pension on account of it, but his claim for pension was entirely upon other grounds. Afterward, his leg was amputated, and he was paid a pension of $12 a month. One of the Senate rules is that they will not increase the pension of a soldier pensioned under the act of 1890 more than double the rate that he is now receiving, except where the cause of his injuries can be traced to army service. Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it would be drawing very liberally upon our imagination to connect this disability with his army service in consideration of the fact that twenty years after the war, when he first made application, he made no reference to the injury to his leg, but later on, I will admit, there is some evidence connecting the disability with the army service. The report says:

> In December, 1903, the soldier alleged that for several years prior to May 20, 1903, when his right leg was amputated, the sore on the leg steadily increased and undermined his general health to such an extent that in the spring of 1903 it was decided to amputate the leg; and the last medical examination of the soldier, made August 19, 1903, shows amputation of the right leg at the upper third of the limb, and also found him to be suffering from stomach trouble and enlarged spleen.

As I stated at the beginning, I am perfectly willing the committee should raise this pension, and the only objection I have to it is that it may establish a dangerous precedent. The committee is constantly being importuned by Members to go beyond the limits they have fixed for the increase of these pensions, and if we establish a precedent there is no telling what will result from it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Just a word in reply, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to ask anything that is not within reason or that is not in keeping with the policy of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in fixing these rates, but I think, according to the facts set forth in this report, he will admit on reflection that this is an exception to the rule. He refers to the fact that in the application of 1880 there was no mention made of the disability to the leg. At that time it had not developed, and it was of such a slight character that it did not give him any trouble. It took twenty-four years for it to develop, so that it was necessary to amputate the leg, and to practically undermine his health. Now, the policy of the committee, as I understand it, is to double the pension of the law of 1890, unless, as the gentleman says, the disabilities are the result of army service. Let me read from the report:

> In view of the soldier's serious physical condition and the fact that the malarial poisoning shown since 1880 was undoubtedly a result of the malarial poisoning of service origin for which he was treated in July, August, and September, 1864, an increase of his pension from $12 to $24 per month seems proper.

So, according to the gentleman's own statement of the facts, it does not come within the ordinary rule. The committee finds that these disabilities, Mr. Chairman, are the result of his military service, for we find it so stated in the report. The committee reports the disabilities as the result of malarial poison incurred in July and August, 1864, and if the Commissioner of Pensions had found that fact, this soldier would be drawing to-day $65 a month. Now, we ask less than one-half of what the general law would give Mr. Duttenhaver.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure but that the gentleman from Indiana may be right, and in order that we may determine eventually whether he is right or not, I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, so that it may have an opportunity to determine the facts in the case.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not like to have the bill recommitted. This citizen, this ex-soldier, is a poor man, getting only $12 a month, and even an increase of $12 would be a great boon to him.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Well, the gentleman has now the opportunity to get an increase of $12, but if he is not satisfied with that increase of $12 he ought to go to the committee. He did not go to the committee with any further proof, and I submit that he ought to go to the committee for further consideration or the committee ought to be sustained.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I would rather have the case go back to the committee. I believe when the committee comes to investigate this case again it will fix the rate at $30 a month.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. All right.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would rather have it recommitted to the committee than to have it go through at $24 a month.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I want to suggest to the gentleman that he may find some difficulty in getting it through the Senate for over $24. Under the Senate rule that is the amount and the amount at which we have fixed it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will take the risk of getting it through the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to recommit the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report to the House its action on the sundry bills which have been under consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEDGE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration sundry bills on the Private Calendar, had directed him to report House bill No. 3011 and House bill No. 5598 with the recommendation that they be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that he had further been directed to report back sundry bills, some with amendment and some without, and to recommend that these various bills be passed in the House with or without amendment, as respectively reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

COMMISSION ON SHIPPING LEGISLATION.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask unanimous consent as stated on the paper which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that on Saturday, February 20, 1904, immediately after the reading and approval of the Journal, the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House bill No. 7056, a bill to create a "commission to consider and recommend legislation for the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes," and that said order shall continue until twelve hours of debate upon the said bill shall be had, the supporters of the bill to consume six hours and the opponents six hours, and when such debate shall close the bill shall be reported back to the House with any amendments that may be proposed by the Committee of the Whole House, and thereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered to the final passage. This order not to displace special orders or appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. For the present I object.

Mr. GROSVENOR. One moment. I hope the gentleman——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentlemen who made objection yesterday to this proposition are not now present. I have no knowledge of the matter myself and do not care particularly about it; but under the circumstances I want it to be held open.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], both of whom objected, are now absent.

Mr. SPIGHT. I am authorized to say for the gentleman from Mississippi and also for the gentleman from Missouri that the objection made yesterday has been withdrawn.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Then, in view of that statement, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HARDWICK. My colleague from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] also objected. I renew the objection because he is absent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw the request. A resolution to this effect is before the Committee on Rules.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 4125 be taken from the table for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman that it will require unanimous consent.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that, before submitting this request for unanimous consent, it would be best to dispose of the pending business reported from the Committee of the Whole House. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. All right.

PHILLIP DUTTENHAVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3011) granting an increase of pension to Phillip Duttenhaver, this bill having been reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, there has been a consultation between the gentleman who introduced this bill and the committee, and it is desired both by the gentleman and by the committee that the recommendation to recommit be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall this bill be recommitted in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House?

The question was decided in the negative.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I move that the amendment of the committee to this bill be amended by striking out "twenty-four" and inserting "thirty."

The motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HIRAM PARKER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5598) granting a pension to Hiram Parker, this bill having been reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. Shall the recommendations of the Committee of the Whole House to recommit this bill be agreed to?

The question was decided in the affirmative; and the bill was accordingly recommitted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the attention of the House for a moment. A large number of bills have been reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that they do pass. Gentlemen are aware that the Committee of the Whole House has had these bills under consideration for some hours. Is there a desire upon the part of any Member that any one of these bills should be considered separately? The Chair propounds that inquiry with a view to submitting to the House a request for unanimous consent to let these respective bills be considered as engrossed, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed upon the reading of the numbers by the Clerk. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the numbers of the bills.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bills, the numbers of which have been read, reported from the committee, recommending amendments to the respective bills, will be considered, the amendments to the bills will be considered as agreed to, the bills as amended will be considered as ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed. The Chair will ask if there is any objection, or if there is any designation of any bill that it is desired to have considered separately? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I make this statement, that I do not think this course of procedure is proper in a legislative body, and for that reason I insist that the bills take the regular course.

The SPEAKER. The objection is perfectly proper, and this method of procedure can only be had by unanimous consent. The Chair has been very careful to inform the House fully of the proposition as to these bills, respectively and collectively, and it is quite in the power of any Member to object or to demand consideration of any one or more bills. Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request for unanimous consent that was made before and objected to by the gentleman from South Carolina. I make this request as to the Senate bills reported by the Committee of the Whole to the House without amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the various Senate bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment be considered as severally acted upon, and the recommendation that they be ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Pending that, I want to inquire if those include any bills that have just come over and have not been considered in the usual way in the House?

DISTRICT WATER MAINS AND SERVICE SEWERS.

The bill (S. 2878) authorizing the laying of water mains and service sewers in the District of Columbia, the levying of assessments therefor, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 3, in section 3, line 20, before the word "provided," to strike out "hereinbefore" and insert "herein;" on page 4, line 8, after the word "age," to insert "either a member of his family or in his employ;" in line 12, after the word "writing," to insert "under oath;" in line 17, after the word "age," to insert "as aforesaid;" and in line 19, before the word "successive," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the assessor of the District of Columbia shall give notices as herein provided of the levying of assessments for water mains and service sewers. Assessments shall be levied within sixty days after the completion of the main or service sewer, and the owner or owners affected by such assessments shall be notified that the same have been levied by a notice which shall be served upon the owner of the lot or parcel of land if he or she be a resident of the District of Columbia, and his or her residence be known. If the owner be a nonresident or his or her residence be unknown, the notice shall be served on his or her agent or tenant. The service of such notice, where the owner or his or her agent or tenant resides in the District of Columbia, shall be personal or by leaving the same with some person of suitable age, either a member of his family or in his employ, at the residence or place of business of such owner, agent, or tenant; and return of such service, stating the manner thereof, shall be made in writing under oath and filed in the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia. If there be no agent or tenant known to said assessor, and the owner or owners be not residents of the District of Columbia, or if the owner be a resident of the District of Columbia and can not be found therein, and no person of suitable age as aforesaid can be found at his or her residence or place of business, notice shall be given by advertisement once a week for three successive weeks in some daily newspaper published in said District, and in said publication of said notice each several piece of property shall be described in a separate paragraph, and the cost of such advertisement shall be added to the amount of said assessment and collected in the same manner that said assessment is collected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VERMONT AVENUE EXTENSION.

The bill (S. 2324) for the extension of Vermont avenue from Florida avenue to Howard University was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to inquire about what is to be the cost of this proposed extension of Vermont avenue and whether there are many buildings that will have to be removed?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] who reported the bill is perhaps more familiar with this matter than other Senators. I call his attention to the fact that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has asked if there are many buildings to be removed in consequence of this extension.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that there are a number of old negro shanties or shacks, but there are no buildings of any account at all to be removed in the event of the passage of this bill. It will be a very great improvement to have the buildings on the line of the proposed extension taken out of the way. The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] and I made a personal investigation of the matter, went over the whole ground; and I will say that, in our judgment, this is a very desirable improvement to be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that one-half the cost of this extension—and I personally made an inspection, and the improvement is a very necessary one—is to be borne by the abutting property owners, and that the aggregate cost to the District of Columbia and to the Government will be about $68,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Committee on the District of Columbia adheres to the rule about taking into consideration the benefits to be derived in making compensation for property taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. We do absolutely in all cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia will be stated.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 8, after the word "provided," to strike out "such" and insert "an;" and in line 9, after the word "amount," to insert "not less than one-half;" so as to read:

That within sixty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court, by petition particularly describing the lands to be taken, a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the direct extension of Vermont avenue from Florida avenue, with a uniform width of 130 feet, to Brightwood avenue; thence, with the same width, in an easterly direction to Howard University or Sixth street, the north line of said extension between Sixth and Seventh streets being coincident with the north line of Howard avenue, in Howard University subdivision, the name of said Howard avenue being hereby changed to Vermont avenue; and of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages for and in respect of the land condemned for the extension of Vermont avenue to Howard University, as herein provided, an amount not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed by the jury hereinafter provided as benefits, and to the extent of such benefits, on any or all pieces or parcels of land which will be benefited by the extension of said Vermont avenue as said jury may find said pieces or parcels of land will be benefited; and in determining the amount to be assessed against said pieces or parcels of land the jury shall take into consideration the respective situations of such pieces or parcels of land and the benefits they may severally receive from the extension of Vermont avenue as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 24, page 2, after the word "grounds," to insert:

Provided, That notwithstanding anything contained in the aforesaid section 8 of said act the assessment by the jury for benefits for said opening shall be payable in five equal annual installments, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, from and after sixty days after the confirmation of the verdict and award, and in all cases of payments the accounting officers shall take into account the assessment for benefits and the award for damages, and shall pay only such part of said award in respect of any lot as may be in excess of the assessment for benefits against the part of such lot not taken, and there shall be credited on said assessment the amount of said award not in excess of said assessment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 1274) to authorize the readjustment of accounts of army officers in certain cases, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think that bill had better go over.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If Senators will consent, before that bill goes over, I wish to suggest that there ought to be some information with regard to the amount which the bill calls for. I hope that, if it comes over, when it again comes up some information will be furnished to the Senate of the amount which would be called for under the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the bill may go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

A. M. SHORT.

The bill (S. 3199) for the relief of A. M. Short was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to A. M. Short, of Stillwater, Minn., $100.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. CLAPP January 20, 1904, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, having considered the bill (S. 3199) for the relief of A. M. Short, makes favorable report thereon and recommends its passage without amendment.

MEMORANDUM.

The above claim arose out of the fact that Capt. A. M. Short, master and owner of a steamer on the upper Mississippi, was fined for overrunning the period covered by inspection.

Copies of the letters of John D. Sloane, inspector, and John M. Lenihan, surveyor, are hereto appended.

Four hundred dollars of the fine was remitted before the fine was covered into the Treasury, but $100 having been covered into the Treasury could not be refunded by remission, but only by appropriation, for which purpose this bill is introduced.

STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE,
OFFICE OF SUPERVISING INSPECTOR, FIFTH DISTRICT,
Dubuque, Iowa, December 11, 1903.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of December 7, 1903, asking me to use my efforts in obtaining a remission of the penalty imposed on Capt. A. M. Short for violation of the law in navigating the steamer Waunetta after the expiration of her inspection certificate.

In reply I wish to assure you that I would be pleased to serve you in aiding Captain Short, but I have no authority, officially, in the matter, it having gone out of my hands when I referred it to the surveyor of customs at this port, Mr. John M. Lenihan, at which time I recommended leniency in Captain Short's case, and the inclosed copy of Mr. Lenihan's report to the Department will show that he, in turn, recommended that the fine be remitted.

However, when I am in Washington, D. C., next January, I shall be pleased to do what I can in Captain Short's behalf.

It would seem to me that if you would take the matter up with one of the United States Senators, and have him intercede with the Secretary, that he could be influenced to remit the penalty. And in that case I would be glad to call, with one of the Senators, upon the Secretary and state the circumstances to him.

Trusting that this will be satisfactory to you and that I may have an opportunity of assisting you in this way, I have the honor to remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

JOHN D. SLOANE.

Hon. E. W. DURANT, Stillwater, Minn.

OFFICE OF THE SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Dubuque, Iowa, October 20, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to report penalty of $500 imposed on Capt. A. M. Short for violation of the law, by the steamer Waunetta, in navigating from September 30, 1903, until October 8, 1903, after the expiration of her certificate of inspection. The said fine or penalty has been paid and deposited with assistant treasurer of the United States, Chicago, Ill.

I herewith inclose report of same made by Mr. John D. Sloane, supervising inspector, fifth district, and also sworn statements of Capt. A. M. Short and four other persons who were on board of the vessels during the period of the storm and high wind prevailing between September 30 and October 8, 1903.

Considering the difficulties under which Capt. A. M. Short was placed in trying to save the raft of lumber said vessels were towing, during the storm and prevailing high winds on the Mississippi River at the time stated, in my opinion he was unavoidably detained through bad weather from arriving at this port in time for inspection.

The said Capt. A. M. Short has been navigating the Mississippi River on vessels as master and pilot thirty years, and has never been known to violate the navigation laws during all that period.

I therefore recommend that the penalty, viz, $500, be remitted.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN M. LENIHAN, Surveyor.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DARWIN S. HALL.

The bill (S. 721) for the relief of Darwin S. Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to relieve Darwin S. Hall from the obligation to refund the sum of $111, being the difference claimed to be due from him in his account as commissioner, Chippewa Commission in Minnesota, and special disbursing agent from October 10, 1897, to July 31, 1900.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEAN LOUIS LEGARE.

The bill (S. 735) for the relief of Jean Louis Legare, of the Dominion of Canada, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. ALDRICH. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. CLAPP on the 20th ultimo.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the rest of the report be printed in the RECORD, without being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). It is suggested that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. Let the whole report be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the further reading be dispensed with and that all of the report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, having considered the accompanying bill (S. 735), recommends that it be amended by striking out the words "thirteen thousand four hundred and twelve," where they occur in the third line of said bill, and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "eight thousand;" and as amended your committee reports the said bill favorably and recommends its passage.

The foregoing bill as to its present amount, subject to the above proposed amendment, passed the Senate in the Fifty-seventh Congress, and was included in miscellaneous cases in the omnibus bill, which was favorably reported at the same session.

The committee submits the following as the report accompanying the bill in the Fifty-seventh Congress:

[Senate Report No. 634, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1475) for the relief of Jean Louis Legare, of the Dominion of Canada, beg leave to submit the following report:

That the bill be amended by inserting "$8,000" in lieu of "$13,412," and, as so amended, report the bill favorably and recommend its passage.

The claim is for money expended and for services rendered by Legare in procuring the surrender of Sitting Bull and his band of Indians. After the battle of the Little Big Horn, in the year 1876, in which General Custer was killed, Sitting Bull and his band, being pursued by the army, escaped from the United States into the territory of Canada, stopping in the Wood Mountain region in the Northwest Territory of Canada. The Indians were a constant disturbance to the government of Canada, and were a menace to our own Government through their raids across the line between the two countries, and it was necessary for the United States to maintain a large number of troops on the frontier to protect its citizens from plunder and murder. During the years 1877 to and including 1881 frequent attempts were made to secure their surrender to the authorities of the United States. A commission was sent for that purpose in 1878, but the attempt was not successful; the Indians refused to come back.

In 1879 one Ellison was sent as the agent of Major Brotherton, United States Army, with provisions and presents, and he endeavored to induce the Indians to come back, but was unable to do so. In 1881 Major Crozier, of the mounted police of Canada, held a council, gave them presents, and tried to induce them to come back. His efforts extended over a period of three months, and a letter was sent to Major Crozier by Major Brotherton, United States Army, to be read to Sitting Bull. After receiving this letter Major Crozier gave a feast to the Indians and read the letter to them, but Sitting Bull and his band did not have faith in the mounted police and were afraid to come back to the United States.

In this condition of affairs Walter B. Jordan, then a merchant at Miles City, Mont., and now president of the First National Bank there, advised Maj. D. H. Brotherton, who was then in command at Fort Buford, to secure the services of Jean Louis Legare in connection with the return of Sitting Bull and his band. Mr. Jordan had known Legare for a number of years and he introduced Legare to Major Brotherton, assuring the latter that Legare was a man of influence with the Indians and thoroughly reliable. Being convinced that Legare was what Jordan represented him to be, Major Brotherton made an arrangement with him by which he was to exert his efforts to secure the return of the Indians, and he assured Legare that the United States would compensate him well for his services and expenses in that connection.

Legare was then, and for some time previously had been, a trader and freighter, living in a remote region of northwest Canada, and necessarily unfamiliar with the laws of the United States. He had no knowledge or intimation that Major Brotherton, of the Army, was without power to bind his Government by a contract, and the services that he rendered and the money he expended thereafter were in the belief that he had a contract with the United States which would assure reimbursement and compensation. The services and expenditures of Legare are as follows:

(1) 1881, April 20. Provisions, tobacco, and pipes furnished Sitting Bull and followers	$350.00
(2) Transportation and board for Indians, from Wood Mountain, Canada, to Fort Buford, Dak., 150 miles, at $32 per Indian:
1881, April 26, 16 Indians	512.00
1881, May 22, 32 Indians	1,024.00
1881, July 11, 200 Indians	6,400.00
(3) Transportation and board of Indians from Fort Buford, Dak., to Wood Mountain, Canada, 150 miles, at $32 per Indian:
1881, May 4, 4 Indians	128.00
1881, June 1, 3 Indians	96.00
1881, July 19, 1 Indian	32.00
(4) Provisions furnished 12 lodges of Indians, about 50 or 60 persons, from April 26 to July 2, 1881	930.00
(5) 1881, July 2. Provisions and tobacco furnished Sitting Bull and followers, 300 Indians	225.00
(6) 1881, July 3. Twelve sacks of flour furnished Sitting Bull and three headmen, at $12	144.00
(7) 1881, July 11. One revolver to Sitting Bull	15.00
(8) 1881, July 11. One looking-glass for Sitting Bull	25.00

(9) 1881, July 11. To one lodge	$12.00
(10) 1882, April 12. Board and clothing for one Indian, nine months, at $40	360.00
(11) 1882, April 20. One year's services	3,000.00
(12) 1882, April 22. One pony, turned over to scout	45.00
(13) Use of pony from August 25, 1881, to April 22, 1882	54.00
Total amount claimed	13,412.00

Legare, at great bodily peril, entreated the Indians to return to the United States, and as a means of reaching their judgment he made presents to many of them and feasts for all of them. These things he did because he knew the Indian character and knew that by these methods only could he secure favorable action on their part. He fed 50 or 60 of them from April 26 to July 2, 1881; furnished provisions and tobacco for the band at various times, and transported and furnished them with food from Wood Mountain, Canada, to Fort Buford, Dak. T., a distance of 150 miles through a wild and barren country. He not only transported the Indians in person, but he also carried their tepees, poles, and blankets. He was obliged to carry all the provisions, so as to provide them with everything they required on the way; also to carry wood and, for a part of the way, water.

In transporting these Indians Legare made several journeys, taking a portion of the band each time, and after arriving at Fort Buford and remaining there for a short time returning to Wood Mountain, taking with him a small number of the Indians to verify his statement that those who surrendered themselves and came over the border were well treated by the United States Government. That the services and expenditures of Legare were appreciated by the officers of the Army is shown by the following correspondence:

[Copy telegram.]

FORT BUFORD, DAK. T., May 29, 1881.

I have considered it best to retain Mathey's troop, as sending it away would reduce the garrison to 186 present for duty. I expect more Indians in very soon—perhaps the greater portion of those at Woody Mountain, and it may be some from Sitting Bull at Lake Qu'Appelle. There [are?] at the two places about sixty lodges, in most cases, I am informed, two families to a lodge, and in all about 300 men, women, and children.

Mr. Legare, a trader at Woody Mountain, who has brought in his last two trips forty-eight Indians, came [brought?] in on the 26th instant thirty-two. These were sent with the others to Yates. I sent back with him two of those he brought in, after they had seen and talked with their friends here. Mr. Legare tells me that the fact of their friends have[ing] gone below peaceably, and were so well treated while here, will, he thinks, produce a movement at once of the Indians at Woody Mountain in this direction to surrender, as they are starving where they are, and also that there is now a strong probability that Sitting Bull himself, finding so many of his adherents leaving him, even his own daughter, will have to come in.

I have known Mr. Legare since last summer; he is well known, reliable, and I have every reason, from the way things look now, to believe his impression will be realized. He has been here quite a number of times, but usually very reticent on the subject of Indians company [coming?] in, but is now outspoken, and seems thoroughly convinced that all will come in. With this in view, I thought best to retain Mathey's troop, as I presume all that come in will be shipped to Yates.

The Indians shipped the other day embarked cheerfully and willingly, to all appearance. I sent with them Allison and Running Antelope. Mr. Legare left here yesterday with his train for Woody Mountain; said he would return in about two weeks with all the Indians who desired to come in. He brings these Indians in, hauling their plunder on his carts, and has so far fed them on the way. Can not he be reimbursed in some way?

D. H. BROTHERTON,
Major, Seventh Infantry, Commanding.

Gen. A. H. TERRY,
Commanding Department of Dakota, St. Paul, Minn.

[Telegram.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF DAKOTA,
Fort Snelling, Minn., June 6, 1881.

COMMANDING OFFICER, Fort Buford:

Department commander regrets he has no funds applicable or available for paying Mr. Legare for bringing Indians into Fort Buford to surrender and feeding them en route.

BRECK, Assistant Adjutant-General.

Mr. Legare was not a man of large means, and he spent everything he had except a few dry goods in getting these Indians from Wood Mountain to Fort Buford. He has made repeated efforts through the War Department, the Court of Claims, and Congress to be compensated for his services and expenses, but he has never received a dollar from this Government in any way.

After failing to get anything through the War Department, he filed a petition in the Court of Claims. The testimony was taken, and the claim was so thoroughly established that no controversy was made as to the facts of his performing the services or to their value, but he was unsuccessful in his litigation for the reason that the court found that Major Brotherton had no authority to contract on behalf of the United States to pay Legare for services rendered or supplies furnished the Indians during their journey to Fort Buford, and the court held that the claim was not a legal demand against the United States cognizable in the Court of Claims for that reason, and it also held that most of the claim was barred by the statute of limitation at the time the suit was commenced, and therefore the petition was dismissed.

This case is No. 15713 in the Court of Claims, and the opinion of the court is reported in 24 Court of Claims, 513.

Since the dismissal of his claim by the Court of Claims Legare has been constantly endeavoring to obtain relief through Congressional action, and in the Fifty-first Congress the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives reported favorably upon his claim, to the extent of $9,000, but for some reason no bill has ever passed either House for his relief.

Realizing the great importance to both countries of the services rendered by Mr. Legare in thus insuring peace upon the border, the Canadian government, without any request from Legare, and without his knowledge, by act of Parliament voted him the sum of $3,000 as a gratuity. The evidence shows that in expenditures and in services rendered there should be paid Legare $13,412. Of course this is exclusive of interest for the more than twenty years which have elapsed since these things were done. In addition to the expense of transporting the supplies furnished the Indians from Wood Mountain to Fort Buford—a distance of 150 miles—Legare had to pay duties thereon, ranging from 5 to 40 per cent of their value, to the Canadian government.

The testimony of all the witnesses shows that Legare is a man of the highest integrity. Alexander R. MacDonell, in command of the northwest mounted police, stationed at Wood Mountain Post, testified in the case, in the Court of Claims, that he had known Legare for many years; knew of the services which he had rendered the United States in returning Sitting Bull and his band, and when asked what he knew as to Legare's character, he said:

"Without exception, he is the most honest man I ever met. I do not think he is capable of doing a dishonest act."

In the judgment of your committee, payment of the amount claimed by Legare should be made without further delay, and it will be far from an adequate return for the saving of property and lives and the expenditures for military forces, which would have been made necessary if these Indians had remained in Canada, making forays across the border from time to time. We therefore recommend that the bill do pass for the sum of $8,000.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "Treasury," to strike out the words "not otherwise appropriated;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $13,412 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury, for full compensation to Jean Louis Legare, of the Dominion of Canada, for services and money expended in bringing into the United States and procuring the surrender of Sitting Bull and his followers, under the direction of the War Department; and that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make payment of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment recommended by the committee in the report does not appear in the bill, and I move to strike out "$13,412" and insert "$8,000," the amount they recommend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, before the word "dollars," strike out "thirteen thousand four hundred and twelve" and insert "eight thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Who reported the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. He is not here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Minnesota reported the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, this bill has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs two or three times. I had some prejudice against it when it first came before the committee, but I have investigated it and I am satisfied that this man actually furnished these supplies at the request of an army officer for the purpose of getting Sitting Bull back into the United States. I gave up my opposition to it some time ago. I think it is better than a good many of the claims that we are passing.

Mr. COCKRELL. The case was also in the Court of Claims, where it was held, as a matter of course, that this army officer had no legal, technical right to make a contract that would bind the Government. But all the facts were set forth in the Court of Claims, and I am just like the Senator from Connecticut. I had very decided prejudices against it until I examined it, when I came to the conclusion that it is an equitable claim; that it ought to be paid; and I think it is a great mistake that it was not paid at the time.

Mr. SPOONER. When the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Missouri unite in saying that, I make no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut why, if this is a correct bill, he is content that the amount shall be cut in two?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know that it ought to be.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not understand the query of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senators are satisfied that this amount—$13,412—was expended in good faith, why should it be cut down?

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the rough estimate, and both committees which have passed upon it since, examining the case and having all of the evidence that was before the Court of Claims, have held that $8,000 was a reasonable amount, and it has been so reported all the time. A similar bill passed the Senate heretofore.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES M. WILLBUR.

The bill (S. 1327) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James M. Willbur with the United States and to pay said Willbur such sum of money as he may be justly and equitably entitled to, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to make settlement with James M. Willbur for excess in weight of material and excess in the superficial measurement of illuminating tiling, frames, and supports thereof, placed by Willbur in, on, or around the New York City post-office and court-house building beyond what he was required to furnish by his contract with the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY LIGHTER NO. 10.

The bill (S. 964) to grant jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of Southern Railway Lighter No. 10, her cargoes, etc., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the claims of the owners of the lighter known as "Southern Railway Lighter No. 10," and cargoes, freight, and personal effects thereon, alleged to have been sunk, lost, or greatly damaged by collision with the United States army transport Sumner, in the harbor of Norfolk, Va., on or about the 17th day of March, 1900, be referred to the Court of Claims, with jurisdiction and authority to hear and determine the same to judgment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF BRIG. GEN. WAGER SWAYNE.

The bill (S. 2579) for the relief of the estate of Brig. Gen. Wager Swayne, in charge of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in the case be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. WARREN on the 20th ultimo, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2579) for the relief of the estate of Brig. Gen. Wager Swayne, in charge of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, having carefully considered the same, hereby report it back to the Senate and recommend its passage without amendment.

This bill does not involve the payment of any money to General Swayne's estate, but merely provides that his account be credited with the amount, $4,000, now standing as a charge against him on the books of the Treasury Department.

The Treasury Department recommends the passage of this bill, as will be seen from the following letter signed by F. E. Rittman, Auditor for the War Department:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 22, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith letter of Senator FRANCIS E. WARREN, chairman of the Committee on Claims, United States Senate, requesting copies of certain papers and expression of opinion in the matter of Senate bill No. 2579, for the relief of the estate of Brig. Gen. Wager Swayne, and have to report as follows:

Late in July, 1865, General Swayne was ordered to Montgomery, Ala., to organize a branch of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands at that place. He had no funds on hand for that purpose, and arrangements were made for the transfer to him of $4,000 from Capt. W. B. Armstrong at New Orleans, La. Captain Armstrong sent by express the $4,000, together with a blank receipt prepared for signature of General Swayne. The package reached General Swayne August 9, 1865. He had as his disbursing officer one B. W. Norris, who signed as "Paymaster, U. S. A., disbursing officer," but he had, in fact, been mustered out of the military service July 31, 1865. The records of this office indicate that Norris received the package of money and on counting it found it $5 short. On the same day Norris wrote to Captain Armstrong asking him to send $5 in a letter, and the next day when he took the money to a bank for deposit the bank officers threw out four $5 bills as counterfeit. These counterfeit bills Norris returned to Armstrong by express. There is no further record, except that on August 28 Norris sent Armstrong Swayne's receipt for the full $4,000. This receipt is dated August 5, 1865, which is no doubt the day it was originally prepared in New Orleans.

The records of this office do not show that Norris or General Swayne ever rendered accounts showing the disposition of this money. While General Swayne signed the receipt given to Armstrong for $4,000, the evidence indicates that he never actually received the money, but that Norris was intrusted with the accounting for it, which he never did. Effort to locate the bank in which Norris deposited the money has failed. It may be proper to add that in October, 1882, General Swayne was allowed over $4,000 for arrears of pay due and no stoppage made of the $4,000 charged on the books of the Department and which is the subject of the pending bill. The effect of the bill, if enacted, will be to credit General Swayne with the $4,000 and thus remove the charge standing against him on the books of the Treasury Department. It will not involve the payment of this amount from the Treasury.

After consideration of the facts in this case, as disclosed by the records of this office, I am of the opinion that the proposed bill for the relief of General Swayne should be passed.

Copies of such papers as appear to be material in this matter are inclosed herewith.

Respectfully, F. E. RITTMAN,
Auditor.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRISCILLA R. BURNS.

The bill (S. 2888) for the relief of Priscilla R. Burns was announced as the next business on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

JOHN W. GUMMO.

The bill (S. 1407) for the relief of John W. Gummo was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John W. Gummo, late of Company F, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, the sum of $190, being the balance of bounty due him for services rendered the Government during the late war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HYLAND C. KIRK AND OTHERS.

NYE & SCHNEIDER COMPANY.

The bill (S. 2516) for the relief of the Nye & Schneider Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $61.13 for the purpose of paying to Nye & Schneider Company, of Fremont, Nebr., an unpaid balance on bill rendered for fuel furnished for the purpose of heating the post-office building at Hastings, Nebr.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOSSES INCURRED BY ARMY OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN.

The bill (S. 114) to extend the provisions of the act of March 3, 1885, relative to officers and enlisted men of the United States Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill the words "and the hurricane in Porto Rico;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act March 3, 1885, relating to losses incurred by the officers and enlisted men of the United States Army, are hereby extended so as to include the officers, acting assistant surgeon, and enlisted men of the United States Army who were stationed at Galveston, Tex., during the cyclone of September 8, 1900, and the hurricane in Porto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether the statute referred to, that of 1885, is not now broad enough to include these officers and men?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; that is what the accounting officers say.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I supposed it was.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should suppose it was, but they say not.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF STRUCTURES FROM INDIAN LANDS.

The bill (S. 3424) to authorize the removal of structures from Indian allotments in Minnesota was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read. It is very short.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is no necessity for the second section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read. What does the Senator from Connecticut request?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The bill might as well be amended by striking out the second section. That is the law anyway. It takes effect on its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes; that is surplusage. But let the report be read. It is very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. CLAPP from the Committee on Indian Affairs on the 21st ultimo, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to which Senate bill 3424 was referred, having considered the same, makes report and recommends its passage without amendment.

The foregoing bill is for the purpose of defining the status of the owners of structures built on Indian lands in Minnesota which have heretofore or may hereafter be allotted to Indians. And to place the question beyond doubt provides that the owners of such structures may move the same, but shall not be required to move them between the 1st day of October and the 1st day of the following May. To guard against interfering with any contract rights, the bill provides that it shall not apply to any structure placed upon the land by virtue of any contract authorized by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to amend the bill by striking out the second section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF ELI AYERS.

The bill (S. 3170) to quiet the titles of certain lands in the State of Mississippi, and for the relief of the estate of Eli Ayers, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

RESUBDIVISION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 3584) to authorize the resubdivision of lots or blocks in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC-LAND SALES.

The bill (S. 580) to extend the provisions of section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by act of February 26, 1895, relating to public lands, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that where any of the public lands of the United States are now open, or shall hereafter be open to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead law and under the law relating to town sites, and for that reason section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by act of February 26, 1895, relating to the sale of isolated or disconnected tracts or parcels, is not applicable from and after the passage and approval of this act, a sale under the last-named section as so amended of any isolated or disconnected tracts or parcels may be ordered by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. But the minimum price for which such tracts or parcels shall be sold shall be the price required by the act under which the land so sold is subject to entry. Where no price is provided in the act opening the lands then the price for which the lands shall be sold shall be not less than $1.25 per acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH LOWER BRULÉ INDIANS.

The bill (S. 582) to ratify an agreement with the Lower Brulé band of the Sioux tribe of Indians in South Dakota and making appropriation to carry the same into effect was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is not time enough to pass the next bill, and I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3720) to authorize the St. Joseph and Grand Island Railway Company, in the reconstruction of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near St. Joseph, Mo., to lower said bridge and to shorten the draw spans thereof. It is a very short bill, covering only about a page, and it can be passed by the time 2 o'clock arrives.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Further proceedings under this order would be under Rule IX instead of Rule VIII, unless the Senate should otherwise direct.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If there are to be further proceedings under this order, I ask that they be under Rule VIII.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What is the request of the Senator?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That if we are to go on with the Calendar we shall go on with it under Rule VIII.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; I would rather that we should not, Mr. President. On the last day's session, when we were on the Calendar we reached a bill on which the yeas and nays were called, and the vote was not definitive because the call developed the fact that there was no quorum present. At 2 o'clock I take it for granted that bill comes up again to be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the Calendar of General Orders under Rule IX, it would be the first to come up.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9641) to amend "An act granting to the Keokuk and Hamilton Water Power Company right to construct and maintain a dam, and so forth," approved February 8, 1901, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 10136) authorizing bail in criminal cases upon appeal in the courts of Indian Territory was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 106) amending public resolution No. 8, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, approved February 3, 1901, providing for the printing annually of the Report on Field Operations of the Division of Soils, Department of Agriculture, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the unfinished business, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the Bacon resolution.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose it will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that it is the unfinished business to proceed with the call of yeas and nays, which was interrupted by the want of a quorum. I remember that question having come up once before on a very important matter.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is not the unfinished business. According to the Calendar the Bacon resolution is the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business was laid aside informally on Friday, and the Calendar was then in order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then the question, I suppose, is whether to-day we shall resume the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the Bacon resolution, or whether, the Senate having adjourned on a roll call for the want of a quorum, that is displaced and the bill proposing to pay the ex-Queen of the Hawaiian Islands comes up as the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. How did that matter come up at the last day's session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business was informally laid aside, there being no one ready to address the Senate upon it.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, well; then the Senator from Connecticut is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senate determined to go to the Calendar, as I understand it, and this bill was reached in its order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And a vote by yeas and nays was ordered, and the call of the yeas and nays developed no quorum, whereupon a motion to adjourn was made and agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. The yeas and nays were ordered on a motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The yeas and nays were ordered on a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. The call of the roll showed no quorum, whereupon a motion to adjourn was made and carried. That, I take it, is the situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But if the unfinished business was only informally laid aside for the day, it would resume its place as unfinished business to-day.

Mr. BLACKBURN. During a call of the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate, and if no one is ready to proceed with its consideration then we can go to the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. And then we can lay aside the unfinished business again.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which was before the Senate on Friday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair will lay before the Senate the first case on the Calendar.

PAYMENT TO EX-QUEEN LILIUOKALANI.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1553) for payment to Liliuokalani, formerly Queen of the Kingdom of Hawaii.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion pending at the time of the adjournment of the Senate was to recommit the bill to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. That motion is now pending. The yeas and nays were ordered upon it, and that order remains unsatisfied by reason of no quorum having appeared at the time. The Secretary will call the roll on the motion to recommit.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is an inquiry in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Hardly, after the roll call has commenced.

Mr. TILLMAN. I simply wanted to know just what the roll is being called on. I understand that it is a bill on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the motion to recommit Senate bill 1553 to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

The Secretary resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. MCCREARY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], which I transfer to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER]. I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I do not see him present. So I will have to withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GIBSON. I am paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KEARNS].

Mr. BAILEY. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay." Therefore I will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. GAMBLE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] has a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA]. The pairs have been transferred so that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] will stand paired with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], permitting the junior Senator from Kentucky and myself to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. MCCREARY. I vote "nay."

Mr. MILLARD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask if the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with that Senator, and withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the negative). By request of the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] I will consent to pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am informed that if the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] were present he would vote "nay." I therefore take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the negative). I wish to state that I have a pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. I voted, thinking that he would come in, but I have no information as to how he would vote. I do not know whether there is any question of politics about the motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know how the Senator from North Dakota would vote.

Mr. HOAR. There is no politics in it.

Mr. DANIEL. I will let my vote stand.

Mr. MILLARD. I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ALLEE], and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS. I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER], so that the junior Senator from Minnesota will stand paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 27, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Liliuokalani, formerly Queen of the Kingdom of Hawaii, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON. I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill fails to pass.

CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR UNDER RULE VIII.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the next bill on the Calendar be stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, when we went to the Calendar, I asked unanimous consent that we might proceed under Rule VIII. Objection was made because of the bill which has just been disposed of. I will venture to again ask that we proceed with the Calendar under Rule VIII for this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the consideration of bills on the Calendar be under Rule VIII. Is there objection?

Mr. MALLORY. What is the request, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the further consideration of bills on the Calendar be proceeded with under Rule VIII.

Mr. MALLORY. What is that rule, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Bills considered under Rule VIII are open to objection, and the rule also limits debate on bills to five minutes on the part of each Senator. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE EMPLOYEES.

The bill (S. 2665) to provide for the allowance and payment to the employees of the Government Printing Office of the same leave of absence as is allowed to the clerks and employees of the Executive Departments of the Government was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That from and after the date of the passage of this act the thirty days' annual leave of absence with pay in any one year to employees of the Government Printing Office, authorized by the existing law, shall be exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays: Provided, That the existing laws relating to the granting of annual leave with pay to clerks and employees in the Executive Departments shall apply to clerks and employees of the Government Printing Office who are paid annual or monthly salaries or compensation.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to inquire if that amendment does not change the wording of the bill without making the slightest change in the effect of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Let the bill be again read.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to have the bill explained by whomsoever is in charge of it.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I will say that the amendment which has been reported by the Committee on Printing was suggested by the Public Printer.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to say that I can see no objection to allowing these Government employees the same privileges that are allowed to other Government employees, but, as I heard the amendment read, it simply changes the wording of the original bill without changing the effect of it. I should like to know, if there is any change in the effect of the bill, what it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Public Printer, I will say to the Senator from Texas, according to the report made by the committee, says:

It would facilitate the keeping of individual accounts in the office if a proviso should be added as follows.

Then is given the proviso which appears in the bill. I confess that I do not myself understand it.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the proviso?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is as follows:

Provided, That the existing laws relating to the granting of annual leave with pay to clerks and employees in the Executive Departments shall apply to clerks and employees of the Government Printing Office who are paid annual or monthly salaries or compensation.

The point the Public Printer makes is that it will facilitate the keeping of individual accounts in the office to have that proviso in the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I suppose the Public Printer understands that, but inasmuch as we are to pass upon it I should like to understand it, too.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have the bill again read, so that we may understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original bill or the substitute?

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have both read.

The Secretary read the original bill and the amendment reported by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I have an impression that in the Executive Departments, unless the law has been changed, Sundays and legal holidays are excluded. Both the amendment and the original bill provide that persons employed in the Public Printing Office shall be allowed thirty days' leave of absence, excluding Sundays and legal holidays in the computation of leave. In the Executive Departments thirty days' leave is allowed, and then an additional thirty days on account of sickness, with full pay. I suppose the object of the bill now under consideration is to place employees of the Government Printing Office in substantially the same position as those in the Executive Departments.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me that this bill is not thoroughly understood. I think it ought to go over so that we may examine it and ascertain exactly what its effect will be, as nobody now seems to know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois objects to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the bill will go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

MISBRANDING OF SALMON FISH.

The bill (S. 220) prohibiting the introduction into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, from any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or from any foreign country, or shipment to any foreign country, any misbranded salmon fish prepared or intended for use as an article of food was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not see the Senator who introduced this bill in his seat, and it looks to me as if the bill involves rather an important question—too important to be disposed of under our present procedure.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will permit me, I propose, as soon as the opportunity offers, to present an amendment inserting the word "knowingly."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, it looks to me as if this bill might properly wait until we have before us on our Calendar the pure-food bill.

I dislike to object to the consideration of any bill, and I do not know that I am going to object to this one, but it occurs to me that it is not the kind of a bill that ought to be considered in this brief, less than deliberative way under this rule. This bill goes to the very power of the Government over and protection of the people of the various States against commercial frauds, and I hope the Senator will at least let it go over until some of us can look into it. It may turn out on examination to be free from the objections which now occur to me.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this bill came up once before and was discussed at some considerable length. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] pointed out some objections which he thought were proper to urge against the bill, namely, that the word "knowingly" should be inserted at several places in the bill, so that one could not be punished for disposing of or shipping misbranded salmon unless he did so knowingly.

Mr. BAILEY. That, of course, was a sound criticism, if the Federal Government is going to undertake this policy, but every State in the Union is entirely competent to protect its people against deception in articles of food and drink and against deleterious articles of food and drink. It occurs to me that this bill raises something of the question we had here under the oleomargarine bill, and the next State that wants to protect any of its industries might want a bill passed to label its products in the right way or in the wrong way if Congress should choose to do so.

Mr. FULTON. I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that this bill does not require the fish to be labeled at all. It simply provides that if they shall be labeled, they shall be honestly labeled; that there shall be no false statement on the label. It only applies to fish that are intended for interstate commerce. I want to say, if the Senator will permit me, that while of course he has the right to object, I hope he will not do so, for I am very anxious to get this bill before the Senate and have it passed on one way or the other.

Mr. BAILEY. I am trying my best to avoid the necessity of objecting by inducing the proponent of the bill to let it go over. I think it entirely proper that everybody should be honest, tradespeople as well as everybody else, and I think if they brand their merchandise, they ought to brand it honestly; but, according to my ancient and obsolete view of these matters, I think the States ought to control them. If the Federal Government is to enter upon the policy of seeing that everybody marks and brands his products correctly, I am unable to see where it will end; and, ungracious as it may seem, I am going to ask that this bill go over. I am not willing to see a bill of this character disposed of in this way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas objects, and the bill will go over.

PIPE LINES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The bill (S. 2302) to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. STEWART. That bill had better go over. I think we passed one on the same subject the other morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

WATERWORKS AND BOND ELECTION OF GEARY, OKLA.

The bill (S. 3658) ratifying an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma legalizing the waterworks and bond election held by the city of Geary, in said Territory, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAILEY. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

FINES AND PARDONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2299) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remit fines and grant pardons was announced as next in order.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator who reported the bill or the chairman of the committee would state to the Senate what precedents there are for a bill of this kind that proposes to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the pardoning power, the power to remit penalties, to release from imprisonment, which I have never known to be exercised by anybody in the District, which is in Federal jurisdiction, not a State. I would be very glad to have the chairman of the committee or somebody else explain to us on what basis the pardoning power is to be lodged with the Commissioners.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] had this bill in charge and reported it. I observe that he has reported a substitute which was prepared by Attorney-General Knox. I will say frankly that when this bill first came to my attention, as a layman I thought it was rather an extraordinary bill, and for that reason I referred it to a member of the committee whom I knew to be a good lawyer, and I know that the Senator from Florida did give it very careful consideration. He is not in his seat at the present time, and I think the bill had better go over until he is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE AT RIVESVILLE, W. VA.

The bill (S. 3430) to authorize the Buckhannon and Northern Railroad Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of West Virginia, to build a bridge across the Monongahela River near the town of Rivesville, in the State of West Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 17, after the word "purposes," to insert "and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 8, after the word "said," to strike out "bridges" and insert "bridge."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 23, after the word "subject," to strike out "Such map shall be accompanied by another, drawn on the scale of 1 inch to 200 feet, giving for a space of one-half mile above the proposed site and a quarter of a mile below, an accurate representation of the bottom of the river by contour lines 2 feet apart, determined by accurate soundings;" on page 4, line 4, before the word "said," to insert "the construction of;" in line 5, before the word "until," to strike out "constructed" and insert "commenced;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, designs and drawings of the said bridge and a map of the location of the same, giving the topography of the banks of the river, the shore line at high and low water, and the direction and strength of the current at different stages, the location of any other bridge or bridges within one mile thereof, and such further information as may be required for a satisfactory understanding of the subject; and the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced until the plan and location is approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert at the end of section 4 the following:

Furthermore, if the construction of the said bridge is not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval of this act, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall cease and be determined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROCEEDS OF PUBLIC-LAND SALES IN CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 904) granting to the State of California 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. PERKINS. We are considering the Calendar under Rule IX, are we not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under Rule VIII.

Mr. HALE. Under Rule VIII—unobjected cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under Rule VIII, by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2226) to ratify an agreement with the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation, in Oregon, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

TURTLE MOUNTAIN AND CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The bill (S. 196) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Turtle Mountain and Chippewa Indians in the State of North Dakota, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER], who reported the bill, is absent, and I think it had better go over until he is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

QUARANTINE STATION, SAN DIEGO, CAL.

The bill (S. 3607) making appropriations for the removal of the quarantine station at San Diego, Cal., and to acquire a new site, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $200,000 for the purpose of removing the quarantine station at San Diego, Cal., to a new site, and the erection thereon of buildings, wharves, and other improvements.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF A. G. BOONE.

The bill (S. 677) for the relief of the legal representatives of A. G. Boone was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think we can dispose of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

CAROLINE MURTAGH.

The bill (S. 1779) for the relief of Caroline Murtagh, widow of the late William J. Murtagh, formerly proprietor of the National Republican, of Washington, D. C., was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

JEWETT W. ADAMS.

The bill (S. 176) for the relief of Jewett W. Adams was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Jewett W. Adams, superintendent of the United States mint at Carson City, Nev., the sum of $301 for money paid out by him during the months of July and August, 1894, to T. R. Hofer and L. L. Elrod for necessary services rendered by them in the mint at Carson City, Nev.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Adams paid for clerical services out of the laborers' fund, but the Comptroller said it could not be legally paid out of that fund. There was not enough in the other fund, so he paid it out of his own pocket. There is no doubt about its having been paid for services.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. R. AUSTIN & CO.

The bill (S. 1941) for the relief of W. R. Austin & Co. was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not find any report in this case. I should at least like an explanation of it.

Several SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

GROVES OF SEQUOIA GIGANTEA.

The bill (S. 2223) providing a means of acquiring title to two groves of Sequoia gigantea in the State of California, with a view to making national parks thereof, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BARD. Mr. President, having been notified that the Senator from Minnesota desires to participate in the discussion of this bill, I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

Mr. KEAN. Let us consider it.

Mr. BARD. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. BAILEY. In order to save it for the Senator from Minnesota, I will ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

USE OF RESERVOIR SITES.

The bill (S. 579) to regulate the use by the public of reservoir sites located upon the public lands of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. If this is the bill I think it is—if it increases the length of time that cattle are to be kept in cars while being transported——

Mr. GAMBLE. That is not the bill. This simply regulates the use by the public of reservoir sites located upon the public lands of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. My attention was diverted for the moment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the report be read.

Mr. HALE. Is it a long report?

Mr. GAMBLE. No; it is a short report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to the bill if it is not the one I thought it was.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GAMBLE on the 27th ultimo, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 579) to regulate the use by the public of reservoir sites located upon the lands of the United States, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report and recommend the passage of the bill.

On January 13, 1897, an act was passed by Congress providing for the location of reservoir sites upon the public lands of the United States, containing, among other provisions, the following:

"That any person, live-stock company, or transportation corporation engaged in breeding, grazing, driving, or transporting live stock may construct reservoirs upon unoccupied public lands of the United States, not mineral or otherwise reserved, for the purpose of furnishing water to such live stock, and shall have control of such reservoir, under the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the lands upon which the same is constructed, not exceeding 160 acres, so long as such reservoir is maintained and water kept therein for such purposes: Provided, That such reservoir shall not be fenced and shall be open to the free use of any person desiring to water animals of any kind."

Pursuant to this legislation numerous reservoir sites have been located and reservoirs constructed in different parts of the arid and semiarid West for the purpose of creating watering places for live stock upon the public ranges of the West, and especially in order to have suitable watering places at regular intervals for beef cattle that may be driven from the ranges to the shipping stations during the dry season of the summer and fall. In the main the experiments which have been made under the provisions of this act have been successful and have demonstrated that it is entirely practicable to store large quantities of surface water that come from the melting snows and early rains of the springtime for use during the drought season of the year. Several transportation companies have constructed such reservoirs at regular intervals throughout the range country, chiefly for the convenience of herds of stock that may be driven to and from the shipping stations. Under the law, however, these reservoir sites can not be fenced, and they are used freely for the watering of local as well as transitory stock.

It has been found, however, that the usefulness of these watering places for live stock that is being driven to the shipping stations is very much impaired by the fact that local range stock will habitually graze upon the grass in the immediate vicinity of these watering places, thereby destroying all forage in the immediate vicinity thereof, leaving nothing for the use of herds that are being driven to market. The purpose of the present bill is to reserve an area represented by a radius of 2 miles immediately around such watering places from the continual grazing by local herds, so that the grass may not be entirely destroyed. It permits the grass growing within this radius, however, to be used freely by local herds as well as transitory herds while they may be driven to and from these watering places.

The bill is properly restricted so as to confine it to reservoirs constructed and maintained as watering places in connection with the driving and transporting of live stock and providing that the act shall in no way interfere with the entry of any portion of the public lands under the general laws of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIG OLIVE FRANCES.

The bill (S. 483) for the relief of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances and others on board said brig was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the claims of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances, of Machiasport, Me., and others on board the brig, for damages and losses sustained by reason of collision of the U. S. gunboat Winooski with the brig, on July 30, 1866, shall be referred for examination and adjudication to the district court of the United States for the district of Maine.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no provision for an appeal.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. HALE. There is a general provision of law. There is no question about that.

Mr. ALLISON. If that is the case I shall not object.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator will find it in section 3, line 13.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

MONDAY, February 15, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art supremely wise and good, life-giving, life-sustaining Potentate, in whom all our longings, hopes, and aspirations are centered, be graciously near, we beseech Thee, to the statesman and patriot whose life now trembles in the balance. Spare him, we beseech Thee, to his family, his friends, and his countrymen, that yet a little longer his genial presence, his wise counsel, and efficient service may be theirs and ours. Hear us, O Lord, and answer us in accordance with Thy wisdom and good pleasure, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of Friday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1501. An act for the relief of James F. McIndoe; and

S. R. 49. Joint resolution to provide for the expenditure of funds heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the Sacramento River.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1490) to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 1501. An act for the relief of James F. McIndoe—to the Committee on Claims.

S. R. 49. Joint resolution to provide for the expenditure of funds heretofore appropriated for the improvement of Sacramento River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BONYNGE V. SHAFROTH.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It relates to the right of a Member to a seat in this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, in the contested-election case of Robert W. Bonynge against John F. Shafroth it was stipulated and agreed by contestant and contestee that the ballots cast at that election in the twenty-nine contested precincts should be brought before the Committee on Elections of this House and opened for the first time in the presence of its members. The ballots were those cast at the general election in 1902 for State officers and Representative in Congress. The object was that the original arrangement, form, and condition of the ballots should first be seen by the committee. The ballots were shipped to the Clerk of the House of Representatives at the joint expense of contestant and contestee.

At the first meeting of the committee for the hearing of this case the ballots were presented for inspection. A subcommittee was appointed to ascertain how many illegal ballots were contained therein. It was agreed that in order to facilitate their work their sessions should be secret. The subcommittee opened the ballots from three precincts, and finding that it took one week to examine them, asked the House for authority to employ an expert, which was granted. Since that time the expert has been examining the ballots, and on Thursday last made his report to the committee. The committee then ordered that each of the parties should have one week's time in which to examine the ballots, and if then either of us desired to send for the expert for the purpose of examining him that we should have that privilege. After that the case was to be set for argument before the committee.

On Thursday afternoon I commenced examining the ballots, and continued doing so during Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. I do not believe that 2,792 illegal votes were cast (that being my majority as returned), yet my examination disclosed the fact that the assurances which I had received as to the regularity of the votes in many of the precincts were not true, and that there were illegal votes therein which tainted the polls, and the polls so tainted gave me a greater plurality than my returned majority in the district.

The fact was a bitter disappointment to me, but nevertheless true.

The law is that when a poll is tainted by fraud and it is impossible to purge the poll of the fraudulent votes, the vote of the entire precinct, legal and illegal, must be thrown out.

The committee has given me every opportunity to ascertain the illegal vote so as to save the valid vote in those precincts. Until I saw the ballots last Thursday, I thought the illegal vote could be detected and separated from the legal vote, but I must confess that my inspection has convinced me that it is impossible to do so in this case.

The law being as I have stated and the number of precincts tainted containing majorities for me greater than my returned majority, I must say that if I were a judge upon the bench considering this case I would be compelled to find against myself, and as the vote in the contested precincts aggregates less than one-tenth of the vote in the Congressional district, I would be compelled to find that according to law Mr. Bonynge is entitled to the seat. [General applause.]

I did my best to have an honest election. My law partner, with my approval, organized a citizens' committee composed of both Republicans and Democrats who desired a fair election. The headquarters of that committee, as shown by the evidence in this case, were in the law offices of Rogers, Shafroth & Gregg, Denver, Colo.

I have always been in favor of pure politics, and when the test is applied to an election at which I was voted for as one of the candidates upon the ticket I should not shirk my duty or change my convictions concerning honest elections.

I therefore will say to the Committee on Elections No. 2 and to the Members of this House that they can seat Mr. Bonynge at their earliest convenience.

As this is the last time I will have the opportunity of addressing the House, I want to thank the Committee on Elections No. 2, and particularly the chairman, Mr. OLMSTED, and the subcommittee, Mr. MILLER, Mr. CURRIER, and Mr. SULLIVAN, for the fair and impartial manner in which they proceeded to investigate this case. Every suggestion which I made as to the investigation was readily concurred in.

I wish also to say that I appreciate the repeated declarations of Mr. Bonynge in the record that I was not a party to or in any manner connected with any of the frauds or irregularities charged. I also desire to thank the Members of this House for the uniform courtesy and evidences of respect which I have received during the eight years of my service in Congress. I have formed friendships here upon both sides of the Chamber which I shall cherish through life. I fully appreciate the high character of the men who compose this body, but it is only when I am about to leave that I fully realize the distinguished honor it is to serve as a Member in the greatest legislative body on the face of the globe. Wishing you all a happy and prosperous future, I will say good-bye. [Loud general applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I will ask the chairman of the committee, if he is ready, to present the usual resolutions in a case of this kind.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I had risen for a different purpose. As chairman of the committee which has had this case in charge, it seems to me proper and becoming to say a few words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proceeds by unanimous consent. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLMSTED. When this case came before our committee it was at once apparent that it would depend largely upon the result of the examination of several thousand sealed ballots concerning which the contestant made certain allegations of irregularity. The contestee, Mr. SHAFROTH, at once stated that he did not believe that the ballots would disclose such a state of affairs, but that if they did he should decline the seat and at once acknowledge the fact. Thereupon the investigation of the ballots proceeded, as he has stated, by a subcommittee and by the handwriting expert employed under authority conferred by the House.

The reports of the subcommittee and of the expert were received by the full committee and, by resolution, submitted for one week to Mr. SHAFROTH for examination and comparison by himself and his counsel. He had not consumed the time allotted for his examination of them, and no member of the committee, I think, was aware that he was about to make the statement he has just made until just before the House assembled this morning, when he mentioned his intention to me. I think it is due to him to say that there was not in the notice of contest nor in the entire record any charge whatever in any way reflecting upon his honor or his propriety of conduct throughout the campaign. Indeed, the contestant expressly admitted before the committee that he had no allegation whatever to make against Mr. SHAFROTH, but that he believed his conduct to have been entirely proper and fair. I can only add, therefore, that there is nothing in the record in this case reflecting in the slightest degree upon the personal character or conduct of Mr. SHAFROTH. [Applause.]

On the other hand, it appears that the irregularity, while it carried his vote along with it, was not made for his special benefit; that the irregular action was not made with any special reference to him, but his vote was simply an incident, because his name was upon the ballots. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to say that his retirement from this body, like his entire course during his membership, is in entire accord with the gentleman's high sense of honor, with which all present who know him or have come in contact with him, officially or otherwise, know him to entertain at all times and to be governed by. [Applause.] The Elections Committee has had no official knowledge of the action of Mr. SHAFROTH this morning, and I do not feel at liberty to introduce any resolution without the action of the committee in that behalf. I will ask unanimous consent that Mr. Bonynge be now sworn in as a Member of this House.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that that would be proper without a resolution from the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman can ask unanimous consent to pass the resolution. It is perfectly proper to do that.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement in connection with this case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add to the statement the chairman of the Committee on Elections No. 2 has made this fact, speaking as the leading member of the minority on that committee, that Mr. SHAFROTH took no other position with us than the manly one that unless he was fairly elected he would not occupy the seat. [Applause.]

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement in connection with this case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the delegation from Colorado I wish simply to say this, that the act performed to-day by Mr. SHAFROTH is not a surprise to us who have known him for years. The high character he has attained here he has always borne in the State of Colorado, and, as representing the opposite party from him from that State, I want to say that there is no one in the State of Colorado who knows Mr. SHAFROTH but knows that he is absolutely honest. [Applause.]

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 16, 1904.

THE PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE, offered the following prayer:

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

"Behold, I shew you a mystery," he writes. I make plain to you that that has been a mystery.

"We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, * * * for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

Father, these who have known him best, these who have loved him, they come to Thee to ask Thy strength for weakness, for light in darkness, and that Thou wilt interpret unto them the lessons of life and death. All of us, Father, who knew him to love him and to honor him, we are altogether, with those nearest to him in his home, in the sorrows of this hour.

Come near to us as only our Father can come near to us. Show us what it is to be the immortal children of an eternal God. Train us to new service and larger service when we go from world to world or from life to life, to be with Thee in this infinite heaven of Thine.

Father, we pray for this nation, that she may always have counselors from the midst of her, men who know her people and who know the world and are willing to join with one heart and with one voice that this may be the kingdom of Thy love. Be with us in our sorrows as Thou hast been in our joys. We ask it in Christ Jesus.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. ALDRICH, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR HANNA.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have a painful duty to perform. It is that of making formal announcement of the death of my late colleague, Hon. MARCUS A. HANNA. He departed this life in this city, at the Arlington Hotel, where he has been residing during this session of the Senate, at the hour of 6.40 p. m. yesterday, surrounded by his family and immediate friends.

The event was not unexpected at the time when it occurred. For months past it has been evident to all who were associated with him that he was in failing health.

He was urgently and repeatedly advised to desist from his labors and make a special effort to resist his maladies, but his strong will power, hopeful nature, and fidelity to duty were such that he disregarded all such suggestions and continued at his post until about three weeks ago, when he was prostrated by typhoid fever.

His friends then became justly alarmed. That alarm spread throughout the country, and in response to unusual manifestations of public sympathy his physicians bulletined his condition daily and finally almost hourly.

As the days passed hope failed, until all recognized that the "inevitable hour" was approaching.

Thus it was that the end did not come as a surprise, but the regret it has occasioned appears to be more profound and universal on that account.

His bereaved family have been the recipients of messages and telegrams of grief and condolence from all sections and from all classes.

He is mourned by all his countrymen—by his political associates not alone because he was their great organizing leader who repeatedly led them to victory, but also and more especially because he had gained their affections and reigned in their hearts as a favorite; by his political opponents because they are chivalrous and generous enough to experience sorrow when a brave man falls, though he be of the opposition, and because they recognized in him a bold and fearless foeman, who commanded their respect and excited their admiration.

Here in the Senate, where he was so long a distinguished member, he was best known and most appreciated.

It is unnecessary to speak in this presence of the great loss his death has occasioned to his party, his State, and the nation. All know it better than any language can express it.

Mr. President, this is not the time for extended eulogy. Later, I shall ask the Senate to set apart a day when all his colleagues can join with me in paying fitting tribute to his life, character, and public services.

For the present I content myself with offering the resolutions I send to the desk, for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio submits resolutions, which the Secretary will read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. MARCUS A. HANNA, late a Senator from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That a committee of twenty-five Senators, of whom the President pro tempore shall be one, be appointed by the presiding officer to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. HANNA, which shall take place in the Senate Chamber at 12 o'clock m. on Wednesday, February 17, instant, and that the Senate will attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect his remains be removed from Washington to Cleveland, Ohio, for burial, in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect; and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the diplomatic corps (through the Secretary of State), the Admiral of the Navy, and the Lieutenant-General of the Army to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as the committee under the second resolution Mr. FORAKER, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. HALE, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. PERKINS, Mr. WETMORE, Mr. HANSBROUGH, Mr. WARREN, Mr. FAIRBANKS, Mr. DEPEW, Mr. KEAN, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. BEVERIDGE, Mr. ALGER, Mr. KITTREDGE, Mr. GORMAN, Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. TELLER, Mr. BACON, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. BLACKBURN, and Mr. MCENERY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I move, as a further mark of respect to the deceased, that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 17, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 16, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, we come to Thee bowed in sorrow and in grief because a great and useful man, a faithful servant of the people, has been taken from us. Yet we come with perfect faith and confidence in Thee as a wise, just, and merciful Ruler, who doeth all things for the good of Thy children.

Help us, we beseech Thee, to learn the lesson Thou wouldst teach in the life and death of this man, that we may be faithful to our calling and gain the confidence and esteem of our fellow-men.

Be very near to the bereaved wife, the mourning family, and to those who were near and dear to him by the ties of friendship. Comfort them by the blessed hope of the life to come in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
H. C. VAN VOORHIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House all conference reports should be printed and lie over one day before consideration. In view of the fact that the amendments of the Senate were considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union before the bill went to conference, in view of the fact that the House will probably transact no further business until the day after to-morrow, Thursday, and in view of the further fact that items upon this bill are very necessary for the proper conduct of the public service, I ask unanimous consent that this report be considered now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in view of the circumstances surrounding the bill itself and past discussion of the differences between the two Houses, in view, also, of the peculiar circumstances surrounding the day itself, I shall not object to the request for unanimous consent; but I give notice now, beforehand, that hereafter, in connection with all appropriation bills, objection will be made to any request for unanimous consent of this character, and the demand made that the rule be complied with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

JEREMIAH O'BRIEN.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, at an earlier day in the session I submitted some remarks upon the life and character of Jeremiah O'Brien, an Irish-American patriot and hero of the Revolutionary war, in advocacy of a bill to erect a monument to his memory in the nation's capital. I find that the address as published in the RECORD contained some historical inaccuracies. I have revised and corrected the same; and I now ask unanimous consent to print them in the RECORD in lieu of the original speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to print revised remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The remarks are as follows:

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, at an early day of the present session I had the honor to introduce into this House a bill (H. R. 10429) for the erection of a monument, in the city of Washington, to the memory of Jeremiah O'Brien, upon which shall be inscribed the words:

Erected to the memory of The heroic Irish-American,
Jeremiah O'Brien.
Who attacked and captured
In the first sea fight of
The Revolutionary war
The British schooner Margaretta.

Commodore John Barry has justly been characterized as the father of the American Navy. I am pleased to be advised that a similar bill has already been introduced in this House, authorizing the erection of a monument, at our beautiful national capital, to keep fresh in our remembrances the illustrious services he rendered his country, both in peace and in war, and to make luminous and glorious the growth and development of the American Navy, in the rapid march of the most marvelous century that ever chronicled the brilliant achievements of the human race.

But while we are rendering a just tribute to the man whose genius and brains created our Navy, let us not forget to do honor to another patriot, Jeremiah O'Brien, who fought the first naval battle in our struggle for independence from the British Crown, nor fail to perpetuate the virtues and the valor of the brave, free, and independent men who, under his leadership, did a deed so grand and enduring as to win the admiration of the civilized world. History does not record the name of a hero who has excelled in dauntless courage and in unconquerable patriotism the immortal Irish-American sailor of whom I speak.

These intrepid men from sawmill and shipyard have glorified our nation's flag and ornamented the brightest page of the annals in which are inscribed the brilliant events that have transpired during the past one hundred years in this "Union of our fathers and sires." The white angel of peace has descended upon the village of Machias, in the State of Maine, and now abides within her gates. But not so in the memorable month of June, 1775. Then the tocsin of war was heard on her streets and excitement ran high in every household. A wondrous change has come over the spirits of her inhabitants and hangs above the face of the mighty waters. The sweet flowers of hope and faith are climbing and blooming over the ruined and deserted cannon which once belched forth the fires of carnage and death during the war in which the colonies engaged with the mother country.

Popular conceptions are inaccurate and misleading. The story of the men of Machias is necessarily traditional. One hundred and twenty-nine years ago the first sea battle of the Revolutionary war was fought. Away in the distant regions of antiquity, so remote that the event is scarce remembered in the chronicles of men, it is not to be marveled at that different and conflicting versions of this remarkable encounter should appear from time to time. One of the most interesting and romantic accounts has been rendered by Lieut. Edward Wilson Very, late of the United States Navy.

The story, as told by him, runs substantially like this:

The news of the battle of Lexington reached Machias early one Sunday morning. It was the 10th of June, 1775, and just then there was an armed Government schooner in front of the town waiting to convoy a couple of lumber-loaded sloops to Halifax.

The young men of the village, fired by the story of the deeds of their kinsmen, gathered and plotted to lend their mite to the cause; but what could be done? The guns of the schooner covered the town; there were other guns in the little old blockhouse, and there were a few muskets; but the authorities were Tories, and all the gunpowder was locked fast in the magazine beyond their reach. There was powder in Jonesboro, 10 miles away; but no man dared go to get it for fear of being missed.

And so it happened that Mary Chandler, a young girl of 17, slipped quietly from the meetinghouse during the sermon, walked over the rough trail to Jonesboro, and that night carried on her shoulders 25 pounds of powder back through the woods to Machias.

This blockading craft was His Majesty's schooner Margaretta, manned with a crew recruited from the hardy seafarers of Nova Scotia, and full of the brawn and muscle and grit which had contributed so essentially to make true the boast "Britannia rules the waves."

When the shadows of evening came down upon both land and sea the commander of the Margaretta, as a precautionary measure, and in order to guard against a possible covert attack at night, moved the schooner down the river to the bay a few miles away, where he thought he would be in a safe position to hold the rebellious village in his relentless grip; but no sooner was he out of sight than Jeremiah O'Brien, himself a lumberman, a gentleman of judgment and discretion, of cool nerve and indomitable will, "born to command," organized at once for offensive warfare.

His force consisted of thirty-five picked men, selected from among the shipbuilders and sailors of Machias. Full of mettle and ardor, young in years, keen of eye, strong of limb, and compact of body; brave and generous, every soul of them, with the health of salt air in their cheeks and the love of country in their hearts; "disdaining fortune," buoyant in hope, and proud in their own self-esteem; each a veritable Hotspur, putting on the "dauntless spirit of resolution," impatient of wrong and weary of oppression; daring to do all that mortal man could do to redress their grievances, this Spartan band, under the skillful generalship of the gallant O'Brien, rushed, as it were, from the very summit of the mount of defiance and quickly seized and unloaded one of the lumber-laden sloops and equipped her for battle, arming her with the old guns from the blockhouse, and stowing away in her hull the powder which Mary Chandler had brought to them through the mazes of a thick forest.

Sailing into the bay as the rays of the early morning light gilded the eastern sky, "dire was the clang" as the two crafts ranged alongside one another and exchanged dreadful shots. Soon the schooner's foresail rattled to the deck and all was over with her, for, closing in upon her and holding her fast, Jeremiah O'Brien, at the head of his thirty-five "Down Easters," boarded and captured her.

Another traditional but doubtless the more nearly correct version of this naval engagement is substantially as follows: After the news of the battle of Lexington reached Machias the townspeople erected a liberty pole, and the fact having been communicated to the British authorities, the sloop Margaretta, under the command of Lieutenant Moore, of the English navy, was directed to proceed from Boston to Machias to investigate the matter.

On the arrival of the Margaretta her commanding officer notified the town officials that the pole must come down or he would open fire on the settlement.

A hurried caucus of the leading citizens was held, without apparently reaching any satisfactory conclusion.

The fact, however, as developed later, was that the meeting had determined to keep the pole intact. This led to the expedition which resulted in the capture of the Margaretta. It was contemplated to use two vessels, one of which was the lumber sloop Unity, belonging to a Tory merchant named Jones; and with this object in view it was seized by the Americans at the wharf at Machias, was manned by about forty young republican sympathizers from the village, commanded by Jeremiah O'Brien, and alone participated in the battle. The other vessel which it was proposed to utilize was the Falmouth Packet, commanded by Benjamin Foster, but this craft on the way down the bay went aground. Both the Unity and the Falmouth Packet were sloops proper—that is to say, vessels with one mast each, and were, respectively, of about 80 tons burden. The crew of the Unity consisted of 35 men, and she had on board "20 fowling pieces, with 3 rounds of powder and ball; 13 hay forks, a number of axes, a small bag of bread, a few pieces of pork, and a barrel of water; the last thing being mounted was a wall piece on the bitts of the windlass." The Margaretta was known as a "sloop of war," but was in reality a schooner, with four 6-pounders, twenty 1-pound swivels fired from the rail, 2 wall pieces, 40 muskets, boarding pikes and axes, 2 boxes of hand grenades, with an ample supply of powder and ball. She was manned by two commissioned officers, with 38 petty officers and men, and was of about 100 tons burden.

The father, Dennis O'Brien, insisted upon going with the expedition, but was persuaded not to do so on account of his age. Joseph, the younger brother, was forbidden to go because he was too young, and Jeremiah locked him up in a corn house or wood shed to keep him safe until the sloop had gotten off and was underway. Joseph, however, in some manner secured his release and became a stowaway on the Unity until she was well down the bay, and when he appeared on deck it was too late to put him ashore; so that all the six brothers, Jeremiah, Gideon, John, William, Dennis, and Joseph, were on the Unity during the engagement. The Unity made a direct course for the Margaretta, and, after a fierce fight lasting some twenty minutes, captured her, and Jeremiah pulled down the flag. Lieutenant Moore, of the Margaretta, was killed on deck during the action. With him were five killed or mortally wounded and ten disabled, while of the Americans two were killed and four wounded. The report of this affair was made to the Congress of Massachusetts Bay on June 14, 1775, by the committee of Machias, and on June 26, 1775, Congress passed resolutions of thanks to Jeremiah O'Brien and Benjamin Foster for their action, and declared that—

> Said sloops, their appurtenances and cargoes, remain in the tender hands of said Captains O'Brien and Foster and the men under their command for them to use and improve as they shall think most for their account and the public advantage until further order of this or some future Congress or House of Representatives.

The sword of Lieutenant Moore is held to this day by an O'Brien descendant as a precious family heirloom.

The Margaretta was subsequently, in 1776, refitted and renamed The Hare. Capt. Jeremiah O'Brien commanded and used her as a privateer until she was chased by a British man-of-war and run on the flats near Jonesport, on the Maine coast, where she was set on fire and burned to the water's edge. The Unity was fitted out as a cruiser and the armament of the Margaretta being transferred to her, it was decided to change her name to Machias Liberty. Jeremiah O'Brien was placed in command of her by the Machias committee of safety. In July, 1775, Jeremiah, in the Machias Liberty, and Captain Foster, in a schooner from East Machias, captured the Diligent, a 10-gun sloop, with 50 men, and Foster seized the Tapnaquish, a sloop accompanying the Diligent. Jeremiah afterwards took captive several British vessels at St. Johns, New Brunswick. O'Brien and Benjamin Foster were ordered to make a formal report of the capture of these ships to General Washington at Cambridge, which they accordingly did; and from there they went to Watertown, where the Provincial Congress was in session, which body in their presence passed a resolution of thanks to them for these valuable prizes. At this time Jeremiah was appointed "captain of the marine of Massachusetts Colony" and given command of both the Machias Liberty and schooner Diligent. The Machias Liberty, with a crew of 40 men, became the flagship of the flying squadron. William O'Brien, a younger brother, was his first lieutenant. The armament of the Machias Liberty was 5 guns and 10 swivels. John Lambert was appointed to the personal command of the Diligent, and John O'Brien, another brother of Jeremiah, was made first lieutenant of that vessel.

This squadron of 2 vessels cruised along the coast from about August, 1775, until September, 1776. The pay of a captain in these days was £4 per month, but was subsequently increased to £8. Both ships were put out of commission in October, 1776, and their officers and crews were discharged. In August, 1777, Jeremiah O'Brien was commissioned by the State of Massachusetts as commander of the privateer Resolution, and soon afterwards captured the Scarborough, of 4 guns and 2 swivels. He subsequently commanded the privateers Cyrus and Little Vincent, each having 10 guns and 16 men, as well as the Tiger, a schooner with 6 guns and 15 men. In the early part of 1778 he returned to Machias, where he was appointed captain of the Ranging Company, a formation organized for the purpose of protecting the inhabitants against Indian raids. In 1780 John and Joseph O'Brien built at Newburyport a privateer named the Hannibal, of 250 tons, carrying 24 guns and 130 men. Her first cruise was made under command of John O'Brien, and when he returned to Newburyport it was upon his petition that the council of state of Massachusetts appointed his brother Jeremiah, on September 8, 1780, to the command of the Hannibal as her captain.

Jeremiah having been captured in the Hannibal by two British frigates off New York Harbor was taken to New York City, then in the occupation of the British, and placed upon the British prison ship Jersey in Wallabout Bay, where the Brooklyn Navy-Yard is now located. After being kept there for six months he was transferred to England and imprisoned at Plymouth in the Mill prison for longer than a year. Escaping, he crossed the English Channel in a small boat and reached the shores of France in safety, whence he came back to Machias, where he continued to live until the day of his death. In 1811 he was appointed collector of customs for the district of Machias, retaining the office until 1815. In 1814, during the war of 1812, then 70 years of age, he endeavored to raise a troop with which to oppose the advance of the British, but met with little success. His house was searched by the British soldiers, but beyond that he was not molested. He died September 15, 1818, 74 years old, and was laid to rest in the O'Brien burial ground at Machias.

Full of years and with honors "crowding thick upon him," at the end of a useful career, with a rainbow of glory spanning the rich flush of autumn's gold, the dread summons came to him. He died with the approval of a good conscience. The nation has embalmed the memory of his many excellencies with a holy sorrow and a sweet tenderness.

The history of the O'Brien family, as nearly as I can ascertain from the records and from the recollections of the eldest male descendant now living, is about as follows:

Morris O'Brien came from Ireland (presumably Dublin) in 1740, and settled in Kittery, Me. There he married the widow of an English officer whose surname I can not ascertain, though her Christian name was Mary. Six sons were born in America, of whom Jeremiah was the eldest, being born in 1744. I have already given the names of the other sons—Gideon, John, William, Dennis, and Joseph. I am advised that as early as 1765 the entire family was located in Machias, Me., where the father and older brothers were the proprietors of two sawmills, being engaged generally in the lumber business. Jeremiah remained a bachelor his whole life long. While he was not the creator he was the organizer of the American Navy and the precursor of that great race of sea kings, admirals of renown and other officers of high rank, who have held proud dominion upon the mighty waterways of the world.

Whether the episode of Mary Chandler leaving the church on Sunday morning during divine service and walking through the woods to Jonesboro in search of powder be truth or fiction, her name will be forever associated with the expedition, if for no other reason and in no other way, through her marriage with Nathaniel Wilson, who was one of the participants in the clash of arms between the Unity and Margaretta. He was a liberty-loving, law-abiding man, one of the trusted lieutenants of Captain O'Brien. He rendered hard and faithful service to the new Republic during the colonial war in patrolling the Massachusetts coast.

When hostilities ceased, when peace was declared and the Union was established, guaranteeing to every citizen the protection of life, liberty, and property, and the pursuit of happiness, he returned to the village of Machias to find Mary Chandler awaiting his coming. She was then 25 years old, a strong, industrious, economical, intelligent, and winsome woman. She filled the full measure of Solomon's description of a prudent wife: "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness." She had buckled on the bright armor of her knight when he had gone forth to battle eight years before, and because she had braced it firmly his honor and manhood had not failed him in danger and strife. To him her voice was strange, low, mystic music stealing his soul away. It was peculiarly meet, therefore, that he should have wooed and won her, "the pensive maid beneath the silvan shade."

Their marriage was a happy consummation of a long courtship replete with loyalty, devotion, love, faith, and hope.

As John Halifax, Gentleman, said of Ursula, he did not want a saint, but a helpmeet; not an angel, but, better still, a woman, to walk with him in his daily life, to comfort him, to strengthen him, and to make him "pure and good."

Their first child was named Margaretta; and I am told that an old stone in the village graveyard bears an inscription, "Sacred to the memory of Margaretta Wilson, infant daughter of Nathaniel and Mary Chandler Wilson."

Here, again, we seem to have another verification of the old saying, "Truth is stranger than fiction." It is from the sun the shadow falls; and the moment we see the shade we are certain of the light.

Making proper allowances for excusable anachronisms, as well as inaccuracies as to dates and details, the undeniable fact nevertheless remains that in the year of our Lord 1775 Jeremiah O'Brien, in the first naval engagement of the Revolution, captured the Margaretta. Thus we perceive that this insignificant little sloop was the babe which has grown into the full proportions of the white fleet of our superb Navy. The splendid courage which O'Brien and his men, true and tried, exhibited on this memorable occasion gave our Navy, strange to relate, its first start. It is now the magnificent arm of the greatest Government the world ever saw—a navy power, invincible upon all the navigable waters of the globe, engaged everywhere and at all times in the laudable endeavor to protect our citizens at home and abroad, to conserve the public peace, to defend popular rights and preserve constitutional liberty.

There is something that irresistibly touches our noblest sensibilities in the heroism of duty fearlessly performed—a heroism which is willing to sacrifice self in a righteous cause, even though the atonement can not make it victorious. In this instance success crowned the efforts of our hero, Jeremiah O'Brien. He counted it a crime "no tear could ere efface, to purchase safety with compliance base." He was

> In his honor impregnable,
> In his simplicity sublime.

In him was truth and nobleness—man's fidelity with woman's tenderness. He was tried in the furnace and proved true. He was "weighed in the balances" and not found wanting. He has been pronounced "sterling by the general consent of mankind."

He had dignity of mind and rectitude of principle, assisted by unpretending good sense under all conditions and environments of life.

If there be one country upon the map of nations which can challenge our sympathy more than all the rest that country is Ireland, the home of Emmet and Curran, of Phillips and Connell, of Burke and Grattan, of Dillon and Parnell—patriots all—who with heart and hand, and tongue and pen, "struggled for kindred and the right." The cypress wreath encircled their country's brow, and the funeral dirge was to them a familiar sound. The national lyre was tuneless. Its chords were broken. "A land without ruins is a land without memories."

The Israelites, exiled to foreign shores, driven under the galling yoke and banished into cheerless captivity, hung their musical instruments upon the willow trees and refused to sing, saying: "How can we sing the Lord's songs in a strange land?" So, too, the sons and daughters of Erin, clad in habiliments of woe, sat down in sorrow and sadness beside their desolated hearthstones and wept in agony and despair, while gaunt-eyed famine stalked abroad in that picturesque and fertile land and "grinned horribly a ghastly smile" at the dismal ruin wrought. This distressing condition inspired the poet to pen those burning words which will go ringing adown the ages:

The harp that once through Tara's halls
The soul of music shed
Now hangs as mute on Tara's walls
As if that soul was fled.

This fair "Emerald Isle," rising from the bosom of her own beautiful waters, staggering under a governmental policy which brought poverty and gloom to her people, was for many long and dreary years neither cheered by the songs of her native bards nor enthused by the eloquence of her impassioned orators. The blighting hand of English tyranny had laid her low, stripped her of her verdure, and she stood forth like a lone waste in a flowery land. An unprofitable toiler, a veritable "hewer of wood and drawer of water" on his own soil, the Irishman, under every sun and in every clime, outside his own country, whenever and wherever the door of hope and opportunity has not been closed against him, has demonstrated a genius for work and a patience in the conquest of details, a loyalty to principle, a devotion to truth and love of country which have forged him to the very forefront in every profession and vocation in life.

In the eloquent words of another, "As the light from countless but unseen stars illumines the heavens and forms the beautiful Milky Way, so the deeds of the children of the Irish race have made resplendent the pages of the history of every country in the world save their own;" but, thank God, the daybreak of the sun of freedom from oppression—the roseate dawn of liberty of thought, of speech, and of religious and political action for downtrodden Irishmen—is beginning to appear in the east and to flood with light of gold the earth and sea and skies.

Jeremiah O'Brien, although American born, was a full-blooded, typical Irishman.

The Irish-American citizen, what shall we say of him? Loyal to the "old flag" and faithful to country, true to his friends, generous in nature, magnanimous in disposition, liberal in his views, and public spirited always, he is not only preeminently qualified for self-governing citizenship, but frequently sets us an example of industry, economy, and morality, the influence of which is felt as a potential factor in the intelligence, thrift, and law-abiding qualities which characterize the communities in which he lives.

With loving impulse we gladly spend large sums of money from year to year out of a national fund raised by common taxation to protect and beautify the graves of those who died in defense of the Union. We make liberal appropriations in order to mark by some enduring structure the particular spots where Federal soldiers and sailors fought and fell for their country's sake.

We are wont to erect monuments to those whose careers have illustrated courage, fortitude, patriotism, self-sacrifice, and fidelity to principle; to those who have become renowned in the public service; to those who have been benefactors to the human race; to those whose endeavors in the arts and sciences, letters and learning have exalted them among the nations of the earth. We have built magnificent cemeteries at Vicksburg, Chattanooga, Gettysburg, Nashville, Murfreesboro, Culpeper Court House, Manassas, Arlington, Winchester, and on a score of other fields. These silent cities of the dead are surrounded by costly stone fences, adorned with trees and parks, and everywhere ornamented with headstones of marble or shafts of granite to mark the green graves of those who "died on the perilous edge of battle."

Washington is a city of monuments; and it is meet that these memorials should arrest our gaze in every park and common, on every street, along every highway, and in every public ground of the nation's capital. Father Ryan expressed words as sweet as celestial fruits or the breath of flowers from Paradise when he penned these radiant lines:

Yes, give me the land of the wreck and the tomb;
There's grandeur in graves, there's glory in gloom;
For out of the gloom future brightness is born,
As after the night looms the sunrise of morn.

But it may be asked why a Representative from "way down South in Dixie" should feel such an interest in a New England patriot as to be prompted to introduce a measure in this Chamber looking to the erection of a monument to his memory. The answer is easy.

Descended from ancestors who were with Washington at Valley Forge, I am fascinated by any literature which tends to illustrate the arduous struggles and glorious exploits of our forefathers in their contest for freedom. "Stand by the old landmarks" is a biblical injunction. Some "quaint and curious volume of forgotten lore," as Edgar Allan Poe expresses it, possesses for me the peculiar charm of a faded face looking down from an old picture on the wall of an ancient art gallery. Although the dimming mists of time have gathered about the achievements of the valorous men who participated in that colonial warfare, my heart thrills with patriotic emotions at the recital of deeds worthy of the poet's pen, the minstrel's lay, the painter's brush, or the sculptor's chisel. Jeremiah O'Brien was essentially a product of New England and lived in a section far remote from Alabama. It, perhaps, would have been more appropriate for a Representative from an eastern district to have introduced the bill; but, in my opinion, patriotism obliterates all sectional lines, and the intrepidity our hero never failed to manifest, and which shrank not from the most appalling dangers, has become the general heritage of the American Republic. By the introduction of this bill I but proclaim the common loyalty and devotion of the southern people to the old flag and to "a Union that none can sever." The "war of the roses," the white and red, is ended forever.

In no country has race or sectional enmity ever been more distinctly marked than in England, and in no country has that enmity been more completely effaced. The Saxons and Normans, for more than one and a half centuries openly hostile, at length mingled into a perfect political and national harmony. The two peoples, so long at war, ultimately discovered that they had similar interests and common enemies. They drew near in friendship and gave as a pledge of their lasting reconciliation the great charter, won by their united efforts and framed for their mutual benefit.

The interests of the North and South are identical. National legislation enacted by Congress affects both sections alike. We have one Constitution and obey the same laws. Yielding each to the other reciprocal dues, it has resulted under the infallible guidance and ordinances of God that we are now everywhere blessed with peace and plenty, happiness and prosperity. The only real liberator is Truth, and she makes none free save those who strive to break their own fetters.

Heroism derives its splendor from the motive which prompts men to display courage and fortitude. "Know ye the truth; for the truth shall make ye free." The Bible tells us it shall come out of the earth and extend even unto the clouds. It is "mighty and must prevail." It is "the pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night." It speaks out like the clear whistle of the stout boatswain above the howlings of the storm and the tempest. It is the basis of all good government, and without it human society can never perform its rightful mission.

The fratricidal war between the two sections is over. Our swords have been broken into plowshares and our spears into pruning hooks. The North and the South alike will hold their dead in tender memory forever.

The South is proud of the men who wore the gray, charging up the frowning heights of Gettysburg, on Lookout Mountain, on the banks of the Potomac, in the gloom of the Wilderness, on the fiery trail from Dalton to Atlanta, on the rolling Rappahannock, on the red hills of Georgia, and in the valleys of Virginia and Tennessee. The North very justly feels a like pride in the valor of the men who wore the blue. On every battle plain, from the mountains to the sea, monuments more enduring than brass have been erected to preserve the fame and to tell posterity the glorious deeds of her patriotic dead. Lee and Grant, Jackson and Thomas, Stuart and Hancock, on both sides generals of unblemished character, belong to no section, but to the whole country. They "are immortal names that were not born to die," and their fame is the common heritage of us all.

The surviving veterans of the South returned to their homes to begin anew the battle of life. They understood the situation, and accepted it in good faith; and majestic as they were in war, they were grander and more glorious still in the busy pursuits of peace. We are loyal citizens of the nation. From the past we have derived wisdom and drawn inspiration. By the Constitution, as it now is, we intend to stand. Let that book of the organic law be read by the people never too often, as the volume of the laws of Moses was brought forth and explained to the children of Israel in Jerusalem near the shrines of their ancient altars.

The adversities of the South have stirred her manhood, stimulated her energies, and prepared her to work out for herself and posterity a far greater and more fruitful career than she ever attained when the tide of her fortune ran at its flood. Her stricken fields have ripened once more and her gardens are sending out the fragrance of their flowers. "The violets still bloom in the depths of her valleys," while the stars sit, each upon his ruby throne, and watch with sleepless eye a golden land of beauty and sunshine, from which even in the disruption of southern institutions the old romance has never departed.

We are banded together, as never before, in the common bonds of union, loyalty, fraternal love, and civil liberty. Divisional lines have been obliterated. After a third of a century of peace and prosperity we are all kneeling side by side at the altar of a reunited faith. We have but one flag in the skies. The melodious tunes of Dixie and Yankee Doodle have blended together into one harmonious and inspiring national air.

The dagger of Spain was unsheathed. Innocence, helpless age, and infirmity were falling beneath its perfidious blows. In the midst of the fires of the Maine the heavens cried aloud for vengeance. The men and the sons of the men who had faced each other under two flags in battle's stern array now felt the elbow touch, fighting as brothers under "the Stars and Stripes" to free Cuba, the "gem of the Antilles," from the barbarity of a merciless despotism. Wearing the same uniform, whether on land or sea, Lawton and Wheeler, Dewey and Schley, Bagley and Capron, now living and dead, under the folds of "Old Glory" fought for God and humanity. They have emblazoned their names upon the loftiest entablatures in the temple of fame. They will live forever in song and story, and add luster to the glory of the nation which gave them birth.

Sic itur ad astra—this is the path to the stars—is an ancient motto attached to the armorial bearings of the Canongate.

Let us build the monument this bill provides for as an eloquent tribute to a chivalric life. "A land without memories is a land without history." Let its towering shaft "pierce the stormy cloud and rear its lofty head to heaven," to tell coming generations of the dauntless character of this hero of Machias; to save from unmerited oblivion a knightly soldier's name and fame, and to keep the corroding touch of time from dimming the brightness of his stainless sword. "Let the shamrock be entwined with the laurels of the Revolution; and truth and justice, guiding the pen of history, inscribe on the tablets of America's remembrance eternal gratitude to Irishmen." I repeat, let us build the monument. It will commemorate the glory achieved by American valor and do honor to one whose illustrious deeds will "to ears and tongues be theme and hearing ever."

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 17, 1904.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR HANNA.

The casket containing the body of the dead Senator was brought into the Senate Chamber, accompanied by the committees of arrangements of the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock m.

The Members of the House of Representatives, preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Clerk and by the Speaker, entered the Senate Chamber. The Speaker was escorted to a seat on the left of the President pro tempore, the Sergeant-at-Arms and Clerk were assigned to seats at the Secretary's desk, and the Members of the House were given the seats on the floor provided for them. They were soon followed by the ambassadors of and ministers from foreign countries, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court, and the Admiral of the Navy and the Lieutenant-General of the Army, who occupied the seats assigned them. The President of the United States and his Cabinet ministers and the family of the deceased Senator entered the Chamber and were shown to the seats reserved for them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore said: Senators, you have solemnly and lovingly dedicated this day to an observance of appropriate funeral ceremonies over MARCUS A. HANNA, late a distinguished member of this body, and all business will be suspended to that end. We will unite in prayer with the Chaplain of the National House of Representatives.

Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., Chaplain of the House of Representatives, offered the following prayer:

With bowed heads and sorrowing hearts, O God, our Heavenly Father, we meet here in the solemn presence of the dead to pay our tribute of respect to a strong, brave, honest, manly man, tender and affectionate in his faimly; warm in his friendships, broad in his conceptions, strong in his convictions, a patriot, a statesman, a leader among the leaders of our nation. He lived well, wrought well, and died mourned by a nation, than which no greater tribute could be offered. These floral offerings so abundant, from the high, the lowly, the rich, the poor, speak more eloquently than words of his worth and unselfish devotion to duty.

We thank Thee for his life and deeds. May his example be an inspiration to the young men of our nation, and his deeds be a cherished memory to us all.

Illumine our minds with the light of immortality and comfort all our hearts with the blessed thought that he still lives and that we shall join him in realms of eternal peace. Comfort, as Thou alone canst comfort, the bereaved wife and family, and bring us all in Thine own good time to Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chaplain of the Senate, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE, said:

Those who knew him best loved him most, and those who knew him least loved him much.

It has been impossible to us who are almost strangers to him in person to live through these anxious days through which we have been passing without feeling that here was a token of affection as well as of admiration and regret. Whether the child that cried when he told you that Mr. HANNA was not so strong, or the statesmen, who are used to the greatest questions in the management of this world, everybody spoke with this feeling of affection, as if this were a near friend to whom he was paying tribute.

And this nation to-day is paying its tribute to his affection, to his love, to that energy which springs from affection and love, as it could not if these were mere tricks of mental ability, if this were any selfishness of a man thinking of himself first and last. It is a tribute to one who forgot himself in his care for others, eager to lift up those who had fallen down, and determined that the right thing should be done. If he were the man to do it, he would do it, with no thought of himself, but with thoughts of his countrymen and of the world.

I met some years ago a distinguished missionary from the other side of the world, from one of those nations whose religions were coming into fashion here over half a century ago. He said to me of the people among whom he had lived that "they loved the Lord their God with all their mind and with all their heart perhaps, but they did not love Him with all their strength."

I have had that contrast running in my mind all this week. For here is a man who did his duty with all his heart and with all his strength, never thinking of himself, not eager to see what it was to be to him or what it would be to this or that man, but bearing his brother's burden; eager to see this go forward, determined it shall go forward—acting with that energy which comes from love alone, which comes from the heart, which comes with every man's thought of God and of his fellow-men, and comes from nothing and nobody besides.

It is not the energy of a Napoleon trying to do what will put him forward, which is like any other calamity in human life. It is the energy of Love, of one who has found out what faith and hope and love are, and who dedicates himself to the Eternities.

I can not but hope that this highest range of human life may open to those young men who are growing up now, that they may follow in his footsteps, in his resolve to live, not with that poor, selfish energy, bred from selfish reason, bred from imagination, bred from memory, where if a man dies he dies out as Napoleon or any other calamity dies out. If he lives by the eternities, no, no.

Among the promises of the Israelites one of the noblest prophets says of the glorious future which is to come to the world, "Their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them." Enthusiasm, indeed, that might arouse among those oppressed Israelites who heard your governors are not to be altar-bred Levites, coming down from the centuries before them. No more incompetent striplings on the throne born from an incompetent father who came from an incompetent grandfather in some line of centuries through all the miserable stages, "bad by degrees, but miserably worse." Your ruler shall come from the midst of them. Your rulers shall proceed from yourselves.

It is no wonder that our Revolutionary leaders caught up that verse. Cooper preached a sermon from that text in 1780, which Franklin translated into French and into German and scattered broadcast through Europe, the first "campaign document" of the newborn Republic, the lesson of republicanism, the lesson of democracy. It announced to man that theory of government, "the government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

You see it is radical; it goes to the complete distinction between the old system and the new. The old theory was of the Cæsars taking care of the Cæsars, or an army taking care of an army and legislating for an army, or, as they say they do on the other side of the world, the grammarians taking care of the grammarians. But when "we, the people," are at the helm, why, "we, the people," take care of "us, the people," of the whole and not of a class or an order. Here is a government "for the people and by the people," and in Mr. HANNA you have a man of the people who really believes in such democracy or the purpose of any republic. If you want Benjamin Franklin, take Benjamin Franklin, though it be from a tallow chandler's shop. If you want Abraham Lincoln, you shall have Abraham Lincoln. In that comes the system for which he had consecrated himself, to which he was allied, and in which he was looking forward, working heartily through all his career.

I remember in the canvass eight years ago a distinguished leader of enterprise met with one of the campaign speakers of the summer and said to him, "Tell me, who is this Cleveland man—this man who seems to have the reins in his hands?" And the accomplished gentleman whom he addressed said: "This Cleveland man is a man who is going to elevate politics to the level of those men of business who are men of honor." I wonder if either of them remembers the conversation now. That described Mr. HANNA then. That is the duty of the statesman of to-day—of the manager, if you please to call him so, of to-day—that he shall elevate the duty of the day to the standard of the men of honor who are engaged in business.

It is for a people that you are caring, not for a class. Government means that the post-office shall be well administered, that the sanitary conditions of the people shall be well administered, that what they drink shall be pure, that what they eat shall not be poison for them. It is the people who have sent you to this work, and it is as you love the people or as you love yourself alone that you are going to succeed or that you are going to fail.

This man was one of the people. He loved the people. What he did he did for his love of the people, and he knew—because he was one of them, because he had succeeded in business—he knew what are the eternities. He knew that a round bolt would not fit a square hole in the side of a steamship. Truth. He knew that iron was to be drawn by this law or by that law and that it must be welded by law and well done.

The man of business honor knows that his word must be as good as his bond, and unless I do the duty God has given me with an eager love of those around me, "Ah, woe is me!"

When men tell us, as those men do who know, that this man could mediate between the men who provide the tools and the workmen who handle them; this man had at once, as no other man had, the confidence of capital and labor, you understand what worked that miracle. You can work it yourself.

Honor! Truth! Love! And as the man of business, if he be a man of honor, has found that high law which centuries have found is the only law—as he applies that in the business of the nation he wins for the eternities faith, hope, and love. These three abide.

"Let us praise famous men. Let us look back now to the fathers." These are the words written nearly two thousand years ago.

The Chaplain of the Senate read appropriate passages from the Old and the New Testament, at the conclusion of which he said:

Let us pray. Father of Life, he is with Thee. He sees as he is seen. He knows as he is known. But we wait a little longer. We need not pray for him. He prays for us in the glad certainties of the larger life, and we go and come, remembering him and looking forward to our meeting with him in Thy time.

Father, may every memory of him quicken us to a larger life, and every thought of the future show us how we are to meet all these dear ones who have gone before, how we are to see as we are seen and to know as we are known.

We ask Thy blessing upon those so near to him in the home, where they will not hear his whisper nor see his face. And we are all brothers and sisters in the house of death. We ask it each for all and all for each, that we may bear each other's burdens, even as we have not done until now; that we may be strong in each other's strength; that we may walk, Father, with Thee; that every day we may hear Thy whisper and go and come in Thy perfect love.

Grant us more of faith in Thee, that we may see Thee who art invisible; that we may hear Thee in the whispers of Thy love, speaking to us in our own lives; that Thou wilt inspirit us with Thine own Holy Spirit; that we may enter into that service which is perfect freedom; that we may do the duty every day which Thou doth command, and that never more we may feel alone, but always may know our Father is with us.

Give us more of hope, that we may look forward as immortals do look forward; that we may live as immortals live; that we may enter into Thy work indeed, because Thou hast given it to us to do; that we may partake of Thy nature and live in heaven to-day, to-morrow, and in the days that are to come; that we may speak with Thy word; that we may think with Thy thought; that we may love with Thy love, and be glad with Thy joy. Give us more of hope.

And for this, Father, that we may bear one another's burdens; that we may remember the lessons of such a life as his; that we may forget ourselves while we live for others; that we may go about doing good as He, Thy well-beloved Son, in the homes of the sick and the poor and the weak as in the homes of the rich and the powerful and the strong. Knit together in love, may we bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the whole law of Christ.

Reverently, humbly, and with the tears of the nation we bear his body and lay it in the ground, earth to earth, dust to dust, ashes to ashes. But he is with God ever. He is changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. He is in the larger life.

Father, we pray that we may learn the lessons of that life as we go and come here; that we may go about the work that Thou hast given us to do to-day and to-morrow, and that we may be ready at any moment to hear the whisper coming to us that we may enter into the joy of our Lord.

This is our prayer. Hear us, answer us, and bless us as Thine own children, in Christ Jesus. Amen.

The hymn "Nearer, My God, to Thee" was sung by the quartette of the Gridiron Club, composed of Mr. Herndon Morsell, Mr. J. Henry Kaiser, Mr. Alexander Mosher, and Mr. John H. Nolan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore said: We commit the body of our beloved Senator now to the two committees of the Houses of Congress and to the officers of the Senate, to be conveyed to his late home in Ohio and to his final resting place. May God sanctify his life and death to us, who loved him well.

The benediction was pronounced by the Chaplain of the Senate.

The invited guests having retired from the Senate Chamber,

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 18, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

WEDNESDAY, February 17, 1904.

We thank Thee, our Heavenly Father who art in heaven, for those finer and more delicate qualities of the soul which lift us above the sordid in life in times of calamity or great sorrow and make the whole world akin. Sanctify the solemn services of this day to our good, and help us to remember that we must work while it is yet day, for the night cometh when no man can labor.

Hear us and so watch over us and guide us that our work may be acceptable unto Thee, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MEMORIAL OF THE WALES ISLAND PACKING COMPANY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 3, 1904.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a memorial of the Wales Island Packing Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York and engaged in the business of fishing and canning salmon and other fish, whose establishments and interests on Wales Island have, by decision of the Alaska boundary tribunal, been placed on the Canadian side of the boundary, a fact which, it is stated by the company, will prevent a continuance of their business and will render their property valueless.

Earnestly inviting the attention of Congress to the grounds upon which relief is sought by the company, I submit the memorial for such action as in the judgment of Congress the equities of the case may warrant.

A similar letter has been addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

FRANCIS B. LOOMIS,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. WM. P. FRYE,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

Memorial.

The SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The memorial of the Wales Island Packing Company respectfully calls attention to the effect of the decision of the Alaskan boundary tribunal upon the affairs of this company, and requests that such steps may be taken for its relief as are appropriate under the circumstances.

The Wales Island Packing Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, and its entire capital stock is owned by American citizens. The business of the company, as its name indicates, is fishing and canning salmon and other fish, which has been carried on at its factory and plant established for that purpose on Wales Island, in Portland Canal, on the southeastern coast of Alaska, a general description of which establishment is found in the Report on the Salmon Fisheries of Alaska, dated December 20, 1902, by the special agent of the Treasury Department, and printed as Senate Document No. 113, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session. This description is as follows:

"Wales Island.—Visited the new plant of the Wales Island Packing Company on June 28 at 8 a. m. This cannery is on Pierce Inlet, opposite Port Simpson, at the mouth of Portland Canal. The establishment is of the most approved type and complete in every detail for the prosecution of a successful business. The main building is 320 by 60 feet; warehouse, 36 by 56 feet; Chinese quarters, 25 by 60 feet; mess house, 24 by 40 feet; native quarters, 24 by 40 feet; store, 24 by 40 feet, and superintendent's residence, 14 by 24 feet. There are other buildings, occupied by natives. The machinery is all of the latest patterns and the general equipment calculated for a large pack. The headquarters of the new company are at Seattle, Wash., and the officers are H. L. Cammann, president; S. J. Churchill, vice-president; Pierre Mali, secretary and treasurer; Howard Pratt, superintendent. The situation of the cannery is such as to warrant the belief that the accessible waters will afford plenty of fish for a permanent and successful operation of the plant, as no other is within 50 or more miles of it, and the streams thereabout have not been fished to any great extent. The plant was outfitted for the first season to pack 30,000 cases, and though nothing had been done at the time of my visit, the run being unusually late, the manager was confident that a fair pack would be made. The statistics given elsewhere show that upward of 16,000 cases were put up, which, all things considered, was quite as good a showing as the company had reason to expect. A hatchery site has been selected, and it is the intention of the Wales Island Packing Company to push the enterprise vigorously and leave undone nothing that will make for the complete success of the enterprise."

The following reference is also made to this cannery in the log of the season's cruise, printed in the same report:

"June 28.—After making stops at convenient ports for the night, the Perry arrived at Wales Island, Alaska, at 10 a. m. this day. Here has been established a new cannery by the Wales Island Packing Company. Wales Island is situated in Portland Canal, immediately across the line from British Columbia. The new plant is the most southeasterly of all the Alaska packing houses."

As stated in that report, this plant is the most southeasterly of all the Alaska packing factories, and no other plant is within 50 or more miles of it on the United States side of the boundary. Prior to its establishment there no cannery had been built in southeastern Alaska south of Cape Fox, which marked the limit of the fishing grounds available for canneries established above that point.

This cape formed a natural and effective barrier against the extension beyond that point of the operation of the fisheries carried on above it, inasmuch as the passage around it is difficult and dangerous, owing to the character of the tide currents there and to the conformation of the coast, which leaves this cape very much exposed to the winds and waves sweeping in from the ocean. There are, however, many valuable fishing grounds in the waters of Alaska to the southward and eastward of this cape, and in order to take advantage of them it was necessary, for the reasons above stated, to establish a cannery in their immediate neighborhood. To find a suitable locality for that purpose a careful search was made covering the whole region, which search continued upward of two years and finally resulted in finding the site acquired by this company on Wales Island. This site proved to be not only the only site suitable for such purposes in the entire neighborhood on the American side of the boundary as then established, but also most conveniently located with reference to the best fishing grounds and most peculiarly well fitted by its natural advantages for the purposes of a cannery.

The fishing grounds, which, as above stated, were readily accessible from this site, proved to be practically inexhaustible. The "Sockeye" salmon, which command the highest market prices, were found to abound in that neighborhood, and by the establishment of hatcheries for the propagation of this particular quality of fish, which has already been undertaken, the company was insured a permanent supply of this most valuable breed of salmon sufficient for the entire output of its factory. It is obvious, therefore, that the natural conditions surrounding this site on Wales Island gave it a peculiar value. It has at hand a convenient and inexhaustible supply of fish. It was free from any chance of rivalry or interference on the part of other factories, because, as above stated, there was no other available site for a factory in that neighborhood, and the factories on the other side of Point Fox were unable to extend their operations beyond that point. This site, therefore, had practically the exclusive right to enjoy the entire fishing resources of the neighborhood on the United States side of the boundary line as then established.

Apart from these exclusive advantages, this site offered the further advantage of being within easy reach of the regularly traveled steamer routes along the coast, giving ready access to it at all times and reducing its transportation charges to the lowest rates. Furthermore, as stated in the report above quoted, it was the most southeasterly of all the Alaskan packing houses and therefore nearest to its market, both for its supplies and its output.

The special advantages of this location for its purposes need not be further dwelt upon here, but reference is made to the expert opinion of those skilled in such matters for confirmation of the above statements. This site, so preeminently suitable for the purposes of the company, having been found, such steps were taken as were necessary under the laws of the United States regulating the acquisition of factory sites in Alaska to perfect the title of the company thereto, and the factory and equipment of the company for the purposes of this business were there established.

The plant of the company was constructed on this island in the year 1902, and was outfitted, as stated in the report above quoted, for the first season to pack 30,000 cases, but owing to the delay in completing the plant and to the lateness of the season only 16,000 cases were put upon the market that year. During the second season, in the following year, the capacity of the plant was increased and its output for that season was 35,000 cases. Its present capacity is for 50,000 cases, and in view of its equipment and the abundance of its fisheries a regular annual output up to its full capacity was assured.

Proof of the character and validity of the title acquired by the company and of the extent and value of its vested interest will be submitted whenever an appropriate opportunity for that purpose can be granted to the company.

Such, then, was the situation of this company when the decision of the Alaskan boundary tribunal was rendered, carrying the boundary line through the channel to the westward of Wales Island and placing this island within the Dominion of Canada, and with it the establishments and interests of the Wales Island Packing Company.

The justification of this company in locating on territory which by the decision of the Alaskan boundary tribunal has been held to belong to Canada, will be found, if any is needed, in the repeated and familiar assertions of title and exercise of sovereignty over this island both by the executive and legislative branches of the United States Government, from the time of the purchase of Alaska from Russia down to the date of the decision of the Alaskan boundary tribunal. The grounds upon which such claim was made are fully set forth in the presentation of the case of the United States before that tribunal, and need not be repeated here further than to cite one instance which is particularly pertinent to this case.

In September, 1896, the War Department, under the authority of Congress, caused a storehouse to be built upon Wales Island, and in one of the wall stones in a conspicuous part of this house was carved the words "U. S. property. Do not injure." This property stands within a few miles of this company's establishment, and its existence was known to the company at the time it located its establishment on that island.

It is a well-recognized rule of law, under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, that the determination of the question of national title and sovereignty over territory by the executive and legislative departments of this Government is conclusive, both with respect to the citizens and the courts of the United States. When, therefore, the authorized branches of the Government asserted title to this island every citizen of the United States was justified in relying upon such assertion as a conclusive determination, so far as he was concerned, of whatever question might elsewhere be raised as to the title to such island.

Furthermore, it must be remembered that the assertion of title on the part of the United States to Wales Island was made in a most vigorous and uncompromising manner, and that such assertion was supported by an act of sovereignty so decisive as the construction on that island of a Government storehouse, which was in existence and is shown to have been known to this company at the time it located there. It follows, therefore, that this company was justified in relying upon the assurance thus given by the Government that its sovereignty extended over this island, and all vested interests acquired by the company in such island in reliance upon such assurance are entitled to the protection and support of the Government.

The practical effect of the decision of the Alaskan boundary tribunal upon this company, under the existing conditions, is to prevent the continuance of its business and to render its property valueless. Its former fishing grounds, with respect to which this site was selected, are all left on the United States side of the boundary, as laid down by this decision, and consequently are no longer available to this company. On the Canadian side of the line there are no fishing grounds in the immediate neighborhood of the establishment of this company. Such fishing grounds as are to be found on the Canadian coast are so inconveniently placed that it is practically out of the question for this company to attempt to do its fishing there. Furthermore, such Canadian fisheries as there are have all been appropriated by Canadian companies located within convenient reach, and the fishing industry on the Canadian side in this neighborhood is already overcrowded.

This company, therefore, operating at a disadvantage on account of the distance and inconvenience of the fisheries and in competition with companies more favorably located and on fishing grounds already overcrowded could not hope to continue its business profitably on the Canadian side of the line. For the same reasons this company can not hope to dispose of its establishment and business profitably as a going concern to any Canadian interest.

Moreover, there is a serious question as to whether the Canadian government will confirm the title of this company to its location and permit a fishery to be carried on there. It has been announced on behalf of that government that the entire territory in the region of Port Simpson is reserved by the Crown and is not open for private occupation. It is evident, however, that even if the Canadian government should confirm the company's title to its present location the difficulties in which the company finds itself would not be removed. It still would be unable to continue its business or dispose of its business profitably there.

Neither would it be possible for the company to reestablish itself on a new site and continue its business on the United States side of the line, because, as above stated, there is no available site within reach of the fisheries in that neighborhood upon which an establishment could be constructed. A location for a packing factory requires certain peculiar natural conditions, which are not readily found on that coast. A stream furnishing a plentiful supply of fresh water is one of the essential features; another is that there must be a good harbor for large boats, and there must also be an anchorage for such boats; and the shore must be sufficiently level to permit the erection of the necessary buildings and plant, each of which requirements is extremely difficult to find on this portion of the Alaskan coast, and it is a most unusual thing to find them all in conjunction. It is well known that good harbors and anchorages for vessels are rarely found anywhere in Alaska, and throughout this entire region the shores are generally formed by precipitous cliffs or mountain slopes rising abruptly from the water's edge, leaving no space available for the location of a factory plant.

Moreover, the character of this packing factory and plant is such that it would be impossible to move it to advantage. One of its chief features is a pier of heavy timbers resting on piles, upon which is constructed the factory building. The cost of moving work of such a character would be more than the cost of replacing it by an entirely new structure. Furthermore, a large item in the expense of establishing this plant has been the improvements and alterations in the natural surroundings, such as clearing the woods, grading, etc., and constructing a flume for the fresh-water supply upward of a mile and a quarter into the island. Such improvements as these pertain to the soil and on any new site similar work would have to be done anew, so that they represent no value which could be transferred to a new plant.

Under all the circumstances, therefore, it is evident that as the matter now stands the company is debarred from continuing its business or even profitably disposing of its property without some action by the United States Government, to which the company must look for relief from the difficulties forced upon it through no fault of its own.

This company therefore prays that if this Department finds itself unable to grant relief adequate to the necessities of the case the question be brought to the attention of Congress in some appropriate way for such relief as may be proper under the circumstances.

And your memorialist will ever pray, etc.

THE WALES ISLAND PACKING COMPANY,
By H. L. CAMMANN, President.

JANUARY 27, 1904.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 18, 1904.

The Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, forwarding a copy of a joint resolution pending before the Senate Committee on Claims, to inquire into the claim of the Wales Island Packing Company (S. R. 45), and to inform you that the memorial of the company, which is printed as House Document No. 510, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, appears to the Department to possess elements of equity entitling the case to a careful investigation and report, which is all that the resolution contemplates.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN HAY.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 11, 1904.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 10th instant, inclosing a copy of a joint resolution (S. R. 45) for the relief of the Wales Island Packing Company and requesting that all papers, or copies of same, on file in this Department relating to this claim be forwarded for the use of your committee, with the Department's opinion as to the merits of the claim.

It does not appear that any papers in reference to the claim covered by the resolution have been filed in this Department; and as the Department possesses no information whatever regarding it except that conveyed in the memorial of the company published as House Document No. 510, a copy of which accompanies your letter, it is hardly in a position to express an opinion as to the merits of the claim without making further inquiry regarding the facts. If your committee desires, the Department will be pleased to make such inquiry.

Very truly, yours, GEO. B. CORTELYOU, Secretary.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

PAYMENT TO EX-QUEEN LILIUOKALANI.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to give notice that at some time I shall move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 1553) for payment to Liliuokalani, formerly Queen of the Kingdom of Hawaii, was defeated. I voted "nay," but the friends of the bill have rather importuned me on the ground that snap judgment was taken, and I feel disposed to let the Senate pass on the measure again.

Mr. GALLINGER. What does the Senator mean by "snap judgment?"

Mr. TILLMAN. What I mean is that the friends of the bill think they had votes enough in the Senate to pass the measure if all had been here, but some of them were absent. I shall vote as I did before, but I want to give the Senate an opportunity to vote again, and I shall make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. STEWART. Enter it now.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will enter the motion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 1553 failed of passage. The motion is in order under the unanimous consent given to-day.

REPUBLIC OF PANAMA.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the Senate such information as is in possession of the Government of the United States as to the present state of organization of the Government of the Republic of Panama.

And a copy of the constitution of said Republic, or such information as to the provisions thereof as may have been received by him.

And that he will inform the Senate as to any ordinance, or other proceeding of the constitutional convention recently in session at Panama, relating to the Hay-Varilla treaty now pending in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CULLOM. I heard only the last words of the resolution, so that I am unable to know just what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not see any objection to the information, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the Senator.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CENSUS OF MANUFACTURES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 4122) to direct the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan in taking the census of manufactures, and for other purposes, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate; when, on motion of Mr. QUARLES, the bill was indefinitely postponed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11966) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians located upon the Grande Ronde Reservation, in the State of Oregon, and to make an appropriation to carry the same into effect, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SANITARY DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] desires to address the Senate this morning. He has stepped out of the Chamber for a moment. I do not think it is worth while to take up the Calendar until we see certainly whether he desires to speak.

Mr. STEWART. I think we might pass one bill before he gets back.

Mr. CULLOM. We might try it.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2402) to secure sanitary dairy products for the District of Columbia. I do not think it will take any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read to the Senate for information.

Mr. STEWART. Let the substitute be read. The Committee on the District of Columbia report to strike out all after the enacting clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read first.

Mr. CULLOM. It is very patent that there will be objection to this bill, and it will take a long time to consider it. I hope it will go over.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator will not insist that the bill shall go over.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it ought to go over.

Mr. STEWART. Every day you are killing children when you do. There is no inspection of milk whatever here. Why not let the bill be passed? Nobody will object to it.

Mr. CULLOM. They do object to it.

Mr. STEWART. They will?

Mr. CULLOM. I think they will, as far as I am able to learn. I think the bill ought to be very carefully considered by the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. It ought to be carefully considered, and it ought to be considered at once.

Mr. CULLOM. No more important measure can come before the Senate of a local character than a bill on this subject. I think it will take more time than we can give it to-day, and I hope the Senator from Nevada will let the bill go over.

Mr. STEWART. I shall have to move, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to state, as I said in the first place, that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who goes away this evening, is prepared to speak to-day, and unless he does speak to-day the probability is that he will not have another opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I appeal to the Senator from Illinois, inasmuch as the bill has been mostly read through, that the reading be completed.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to the reading being completed.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest that we leave it exactly as it is, and after the Senator from Wisconsin has finished his speech, if the Senate desires, it can pass upon it this legislative day.

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to that.

Mr. BAILEY. I just make that suggestion.

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think that all of the bill has been read, and I shall therefore expect that it shall be read when it comes up again. I do not think it was all read.

Mr. CULLOM. It was not all read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Only about one-half of the substitute was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I thought.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA—PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the resolution which has heretofore been before the Senate pertaining to our relations with Colombia be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. BACON on the 12th ultimo, as modified by him on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully informed that the Senate favor and advise the negotiation, with a view to its ratification, of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia, to the end that there may be peacefully and satisfactorily determined and adjusted all differences between the United States and the Republic of Colombia, with the intent of removing any cause of irritation or conflict, and of restoring the cordial relations heretofore existing between the United States and Colombia, and also of securing the hearty cooperation of the Colombian people in the construction of the canal at Panama.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I take the floor under great embarrassment for more reasons than one. The shadow of death still rests upon this Chamber, and no Senator can banish the consciousness that a very powerful and kindly personality has passed forever from our midst. Every Senator, whether he will or not, will find himself looking for a face which he can not see and listening for a voice which he can not hear. I know that I have no heart for speech, and I know that my colleagues here have no heart for listening.

Moreover, Mr. President, I know that nothing which can be said upon this great subject will change any Senator's conviction as to his duty. Nevertheless I feel constrained to place in the RECORD some observations upon the general subject.

I am gratified, as I think the people of the whole country are, that we are not divided upon party lines either in the discussion or the decision of this matter, so monumental in its importance to the country for all time. The debate has been a very thorough one. It has been not without bitterness. It could not have been expected probably that that phase of it should be eliminated.

Some very bitter imputations have been cast upon the President. He has been charged with violating the plain provisions of a law of Congress. He has been charged with usurping the power which is vested by the Constitution in Congress alone to declare war, and he has been charged with violating the established principles of international law. These would be serious charges if they were grounded in truth, which in my opinion they are not.

Bitterness in debate, Mr. President, toward a President counts for little. There has been no President since the formation of the Government who was exempt from it. It was more virulent in the early days of the Republic than it is in modern times. President Lincoln, now reverenced by all mankind as one of the kindliest characters and noblest men who ever ruled, I can remember, was attacked as a tyrant, as a systematic violator of the Constitution, and as a murderer. President McKinley, considerate of every human being, and of whom I think it may be justly said that he never thought an unkind thought or did an unkind act, was not exempt from it. He has passed away, and all criticism of him has passed away. We find no Senator to-day in this Chamber, where we listened to attacks upon him, aye, even to imputations upon his honor, who would give ear for a moment to those suggestions, or who would even criticise him in his policy, except in the kindliest way.

These things are evanescent, Mr. President. History takes no note of them, except to give occasion for wonder that they ever were said. I believe that, taken all in all, the people of the United States feel that the President, in what has been done and for which he has been so bitterly criticised, interpreted their will, safeguarded their interests; and all, of course, in an honorable way.

RECENT HISTORY OF CANAL LEGISLATION.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to put in the RECORD very briefly a reference to the legislative history upon this subject, not ancient, but modern. There is in certain observations which have been made on the other side some occasion for it.

In 1898 the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] introduced a bill, which accepted the proposition made by the Maritime Canal Company to cancel all of its outstanding obligations, and to conform to certain requirements indicated in the bill. The bill was intended to provide for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal. The capital stock of that corporation was to be increased to $100,000,000, as I remember it.

Mr. MORGAN. Limited to that.

Mr. SPOONER. Limited to $100,000,000, $70,000,000 of which was to become the property of the United States, which was to control the board of directors of the company. The company was authorized to issue $100,000,000 of bonds, which were to be guaranteed by the United States, and with the proceeds the work of constructing the canal was to proceed.

That bill passed the Senate on the 21st of January, 1899. I was opposed to the bill as introduced for several reasons; one, because, Mr. President, it seemed to me very clearly to violate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and also the canal concession by placing the control of the concession in a foreign government. I thought that the obstruction which the Clayton-Bulwer treaty constituted to the construction of the canal ought, in the interest of international harmony and upon every possible theory, to be removed by negotiation, as it ultimately was, and not by the harsh method of legislative abrogation.

Another thing, Mr. President. Under that bill the Government was not providing for further concessions from Nicaragua and Costa Rica. It was simply stepping into the shoes, if I may use that phrase, of the Maritime Canal Company and investing its money under the concession held by that company, which had not long to run, and which had, so far as the Government of Nicaragua could do it, been already forfeited, the forfeiture to take effect upon the expiration of a few years, by a grant of a similar concession to another company then to take effect.

Another thing, Mr. President, if these objections had been eliminated, which led me to oppose that bill was that under the Nicaragua concession after a period of ninety-nine years, to be followed by another period of ninety-nine years, the canal property—all of it—would become the sole property of those Governments.

Mr. MORGAN. Has the Senator the bill before him?

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not. The bill did not refer to that; but the Senator will not dispute that there was a time limitation in the concession granted by Nicaragua and Costa Rica to the Maritime Canal Company, first, a period of ninety-nine years, and then a leasehold period, at a certain rate, of ninety-nine years, and I was not willing——

Mr. MORGAN rose.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator dispute that?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not remember quite distinctly about that; but the bill contained no such provision.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the bill to which the Senator refers the one which passed the Senate by a vote of 48 to 6?

Mr. SPOONER. It passed by a large vote.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will permit me, while I am up I will remark that that was predicated upon the principle of the Frelinghuysen-Zavala treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. The bill was largely debated, Mr. President, and whatever the Government might have been able to obtain later nobody could know, but under the provisions of that bill, had it become a law, without amendment, in the respects I have suggested, the Government would have invested $100,000,000 in the construction of a canal which in a hundred and ninety-eight years would have belonged to Nicaragua and Costa Rica. I was not willing, for one, to vote for that proposition.

Mr. MORGAN. Did the Senator vote against the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. I voted for the bill after the adoption of an amendment to which I will call attention.

Mr. MORGAN. There was a minority of but six against it.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I think the minority was six—a very small minority. I would not have voted for the bill without the elimination by amendment of the objections to which I have adverted, as I looked upon it as a proposition to invest a hundred million dollars of Government money upon a foundation as flimsy as a fog bank. I also felt that the plainest principles of prudence required that the Government should not be tied down to negotiation for a concession to the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, thereby subjecting the Government to the alternative of unjust exactions or of another failure to construct the canal. In order to remove the objections, which I sincerely urged, and which I thought then and think now were substantial, I offered an amendment, to stand as section 12, as follows:

That if the President is unable to secure from the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica such concessions as will enable the United States to build and perpetually own and control said canal, he is authorized to negotiate for the control of the right to construct, maintain, and perpetually control some other canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the President is requested to negotiate for the abrogation or modification of all treaty obligations, if any such exist, in anywise interfering with the construction, ownership, and perpetual control of any such canal.

This amendment was accepted by the distinguished Senator from Alabama as of substance and wisdom. Thus amended, and also amended in some other particulars on the motion of other Senators, I voted for the bill, which passed the Senate. That bill was reported back from the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on February 13, 1899, by substitute which was substantially what has become known as the Hepburn bill.

During the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress Mr. HEPBURN introduced a bill to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. It was never reported from the committee.

On the 2d of May, 1900, the House of Representatives passed the Hepburn bill, to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by the Nicaraguan route. That bill was reported back by the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals May 14, 1900, and died. It provided practically for fortifying the canal, as I think should be provided and as now can be provided by whichever route the canal may be constructed. It died then, Mr. President, because we were in the midst of negotiations with Great Britain to remove the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

At that time we had amended the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and Great Britain was considering the question whether to agree or not with the amendments. It was pretty generally thought in the Senate, and I thought then and still think wisely considered, that it would be an act of international indecency while those negotiations, initiated at our request, were pending, to pass an act the effect of which would be to abrogate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

In 1899, Mr. President, there was incorporated in the river and harbor bill—I think introduced by the Senator from Alabama and referred to the Committee on Commerce—a provision which was substantially the Hepburn bill for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, and it passed the Senate. The House of Representatives nonconcurred in it and the bill went into conference—that provision with the other provisions which had been disagreed to. The distinguished Senator from Maine who presides over the deliberations of this body [Mr. FRYE], was the chairman of the conference committee on the part of the Senate, and Mr. BURTON, I think, was chairman of the conference committee on the part of the House. Out of that conference came, Mr. President, the Canal Commission act, the pertinent portion of which is as follows:

CANAL COMMISSION ACT.

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States of America be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to make full and complete investigation of the Isthmus of Panama with a view to the construction of a canal by the United States across the same to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; that the President is authorized to make investigation of any and all practicable routes for a canal across said Isthmus of Panama, and particularly to investigate the two routes known respectively as the Nicaraguan route and the Panama route, with a view to determining the most practicable and feasible route for such canal, together with the proximate and probable cost of constructing a canal at each of two or more of said routes; and the President is further authorized to investigate and ascertain what rights, privileges, and franchises, if any, may be held and owned by any corporations, associations, or individuals, and what work, if any, has been done by such corporations, associations, or individuals in the construction of a canal at either or any of said routes, and particularly at the so-called Nicaraguan and Panama routes, respectively and likewise to ascertain the cost of purchasing all of the rights, privileges, and franchises held and owned by any such corporations, associations, and individuals in any and all of such routes, particularly the said Nicaraguan route and the said Panama route; and likewise to ascertain the probable or proximate cost of constructing a suitable harbor at each of the termini of said canal, with the probable annual cost of maintenance of said harbors, respectively; and generally the President is authorized to make such full and complete investigation as to determine the most feasible and practicable route across said Isthmus for a canal, together with the cost of constructing the same and placing the same under the control, management, and ownership of the United States.

SEC. 4. To enable the President to make the investigations and ascertainments herein provided for, he is hereby authorized to employ in said service any of the engineers of the United States Army, at his discretion, and likewise to employ any engineers in civil life, at his discretion, and any other persons necessary to make such investigation, and to fix the compensation of any and all of such engineers and other persons.

To make full and complete investigation of the Isthmus of Panama with a view to the construction of a canal by the United States across the same to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; that the President is authorized to make investigation of any and all practicable routes for a canal across said Isthmus of Panama, and particularly to investigate the two routes known respectively as the Nicaraguan route and the Panama route, with a view to determining the most practicable and feasible route for such canal.

That was the duty laid, Mr. President, by Congress upon the President, and $1,000,000 were appropriated to defray the expense of the investigation, the result of which the President was to report to Congress.

Under this act President McKinley appointed a Commission of nine, the personnel being as follows: Admiral Walker, chairman; Samuel Pasco, ex-Senator; Mr. George S. Morison, civil engineer; Lieutenant-Colonel Ernst, Corps of Engineers, United States Army; Louis M. Haupt, civil engineer; Alfred Noble, civil engineer; Col. Peter C. Hains, Corps of Engineers, United States Army; William H. Burr, civil engineer, and Prof. Emory R. Johnson. This commission was chosen with great care, and its members were once referred to here by the distinguished Senator from Alabama as "the pick of the country." I have never heard that Commission impeached as to ability or as to integrity. Some of the most eminent engineers of the United States were charged with the duty of investigating the different routes and of reporting to Congress as to which the public interest required to be adopted.

REPORTS OF CANAL COMMISSION.

The Commission spent over two years in the work and made "a preliminary report" and what is called a "final report," bearing date November 16, 1901. Both reports were unanimous. They pointed out certain advantages in the Nicaragua route; certain advantages in the Panama route; pointed out the fact, which everyone knew, that the Government of the United States was not at liberty to negotiate with Colombia directly and freely for the requisite concession to secure the construction of the Panama Canal, because there was held outstanding by a French company a concession, under which hundreds of millions of dollars had been expended, a vast amount of work had been performed, and the life of which had some years to run, disabling the Republic of Colombia from entering into any negotiations with reference to the Panama route unless the concessions and property of the New Panama Canal Company should be first acquired with Colombia's consent. That Commission reported that the New Panama Canal Company demanded, as I remember it, $109,000,000 for its property and concessions, which the Commission estimated to be worth $40,000,000, and not more. They were not willing that the Government of the United States should be "held up" in this way by the French company, and therefore they reported, in view of this extortionate demand and all things considered, in favor of the Nicaragua Canal as the more feasible of the two routes.

It was while this unanimous report, qualified as it was, both preliminary and final, was standing that on January 9, 1902, the House of Representatives passed, with, I think, only two negative votes, the Hepburn bill, which came to the Senate.

Mr. President, while that bill was pending in the Senate and on the 9th of January, 1902, the French company reduced its offer from $109,000,000 to $40,000,000, the estimate of actual value, made by the Canal Commission. Then the Canal Commission, being brought together by order of the President to consider the changed situation with reference to whether a changed report should be made, made a supplementary report, which was unanimous, and was transmitted by the President to Congress January 20, 1902, in which it recommended the adoption of the Panama route.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I think I shall have to ask the Senator to reflect a moment about that last statement as to the Commission being unanimous. Mr. Haupt put in the record of the proceedings of that Commission a dissent to which I have called the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Wisconsin heretofore. I think he ought to state that.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I regret somewhat that the Senator from Alabama has again called my attention to a fact which I had not at all forgotten. The Senator's suggestion does not call upon me to change in the slightest degree the statement which I made, which is that that report when sent to the Senate by the President bore the signature of every member of that Commission, including that of Mr. Haupt.

Mr. MORGAN. But it did not contain Mr. Haupt's dissent.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Haupt did not put his dissent upon it. He signed the report.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. MORGAN. Allow me to say just this: Mr. Haupt swore that he did before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. His testimony is in the report, where every Senator can see it.
